CH. AD: Associate Adeptus Minor, where is this Vault symbolically situated?

3RD AD: In the centre of the earth, in the mountain of caverns, the mystic mountain of Abiegnus.

CH. AD: Mighty Adeptus Major, what is this mystic mountain of Abiegnus?

2ND AD: It is the mountain of God in the centre of the universe, the sacred Rosicrucian mountain of initiation.

CH. AD: Associate Adeptus Minor, what is the meaning of this title Abiegnus?

3RD AD: It is Abi-agnus, lamb of the Father. It is by metathesis Abi-Genos, born of the Father. Bia-Genos, strength of our race, and the four words make the sentence, "mountain of the lamb of the Father, and the strength of our race." I.A.O. Yeheshua. Such are the words.

All salute with $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$ signs.

CH. AD: Mighty Adeptus Major, what is the key to this Vault?

2ND AD: The Rose and the Cross which resume the life of nature and the powers hidden in the word I.N.R.I.

CH. AD: Associate Adeptus Minor, what is the emblem which we bear in our left hands?

3RD AD: It is a form of the Rose and Cross, the ancient crux ansata or Egyptian symbol of life.

CH. AD: Mighty Adeptus Major, what is its meaning?

2ND AD: It represents the force of the ten Sephiroth in nature, divided into a hexad and a tetrad. The oval embraces the first six Sephiroth and the Tau cross the lower four, answering to the four elements.

CH. AD: Associate Adeptus Minor, what is the emblem which I bear upon my breast?

3RD AD: The complete symbol of the Rose and Cross.

CH. AD: Mighty Adeptus Major, what is its meaning?

2ND AD: It is the key of sigils and of rituals and represents the force of the twenty-two letters in nature, as divided into a three, a seven, and a twelve; many and great are its mysteries.

CH. AD: Associate Adeptus Minor, what is the wand which thou bearest?

3RD AD: A simple wand having the colours of the twelve signs of the zodiac between light and darkness, and surmounted by the lotus flower of Isis. It symbolizes the development of creation.

CH. AD: Mighty Adeptus Major, thy wand and its meaning?

2ND AD: A wand terminating in the symbol of the binary and surmounted by the Tau cross of life, or the head of the phoenix, sacred to Osiris. The seven colours between light and darkness are attributed to the planets. It symbolizes rebirth and resurrection from death.

CH. AD: My wand is surmounted by the winged globe, around which the twin serpents of Egypt twine. It symbolizes the equilibrated force of the spirit and the four elements beneath the everlasting wings of the Holy One. Associate Adeptus Minor, what are the words inscribed upon the door of the Vault, and how is it guarded?

3RD AD: Post centum viginti annos patebo—"After 120 years I shall open"—and the door is guarded by the elemental tablets and by the Kerubic emblems.

CH. AD: The 120 years refer symbolically to the five grades of the First Order and to the revolution of the powers of the pentagram; also to the five preparatory examinations for this grade. It is written, "His days shall be 120 years" and 120 divided by five yields twenty-four, the number of hours in a day and of the thrones of the elders in the Apocalypse. Further 120 equals the number of the ten Sephiroth multiplied by that of the zodiac, whose key is the working of the spirit and the four elements typified in the wand which I bear.

Chief Adept knocks. All face east. Chief Adept opens the Vault wide, enters, passes to the eastern end, or place of the head of the Pastos or coffin of C.R.C., and then faces west. Second Adept enters and passes to south; Third Adept to north. Other members remain standing as before. The three officers, each with a special wand in his right hand and crux ansata in left, stretch out their wands to form a pyramid above the altar and also the cruces below.

CH. AD: Let us analyse the keyword. I.

2ND AD: N.

3RD AD: R.

ALL: I.

CH. AD: Yod.

2ND AD: Nun.

3RD AD: Resh.

ALL: Yod.

CH. AD: Virgo, Isis, mighty mother.

2ND AD: Scorpio, Apophis, destroyer.

3RD AD: Sol, Osiris, slain and risen.

ALL: Isis, Apophis, Osiris, I.A.O.

All then simultaneously separate wands and cruces, and say:

ALL: The Sign of Osiris Slain. (Gives it.)

CH. AD: L. The Sign of the Mourning of Isis. (With head bowed)

2ND AD: V. The Sign of Typhon and Apophis. (With head bowed)

3RD: X. The sign of Osiris risen. (With head bowed)

All together with the saluting sign and bowed head.

ALL: L.V.X., Lux, the light of the cross.

All quit the Vault and return to previous places.

CH. AD: In the grand word Yeheshuah, by the keyword I.N.R.I., and through the concealed word Lux, I have opened the Vault of the Adepts.

All give L.V.X. signs.

2ND AD: Let the cross of the obligation be set in its place.

CH. AD: Upon this cross of the obligation, I, freely and unasked, on behalf of the Second Order, do hereby pledge myself for the due performance and fulfillment of the respective clauses of the oath taken by each member on the cross of suffering at his admission to the grade of Adeptus Minor.

2ND AD: It is written: “Whosoever shall be great among you shall be your minister, and whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be the servant of all.” I therefore, on behalf of the Second Order, do require of you to divest yourself of your robes and insignia as a Chief Adept, to clothe yourself with the black robe of mourning, and to put the chain of humility about your neck.

Chief Adept disrobes, puts on chain, and is fastened to the cross. Second recites obligation ²⁹ adding after “do this day spiritually bind myself” the words “on behalf of the whole Second Order.”

CH. AD: (While still bound.) I invoke thee, the great avenging angel Hua, to confirm and strengthen all the members of this Order during the ensuing revolution of the sun—to keep them steadfast in the path of rectitude and self-sacrifice, and to confer upon them the power of discernment, that they may choose between the evil and the good, and try all things of doubtful or fictitious seeming with sure knowledge and sound judgment.

2ND AD: Let the Chief Adept descend from the cross of suffering.

He is released and the cross removed.

2ND AD: Merciful Exempt Adept, I, on behalf of the Second Order, request you to reinvest yourself with the insignia of your high office, which alone has entitled you to offer yourself unto the high powers as surety for the Order.

Chief Adept reclothes. Three adepts enter the Vault, roll altar aside, open lid of Pastos, put Book T upon the table. Chief Adept steps into the Pastos and stands facing the door. The three adepts join wands and cruces.

CH. AD: I invoke thee, Hru, the great angel who art set over the operations of this secret wisdom, to strengthen and establish this order in its search for the mysteries of the divine light. Increase the spiritual perception of the members and enable them to rise beyond that lower selfhood which is nothing, unto that highest selfhood which is in God the vast one.

The three adepts disjoin wands and lower them into the Pastos, joining them together at the black ends, directing them towards the centre of the floor. They hold cruces as before.

And now, in the tremendous name of strength through sacrifice, Yeheshua Yehovasha, I authorize and charge ye, ye forces of evil that be beneath the universe, that, should a member of this Order, through will, forgetfulness, or weakness, act contrary to the obligation which he hath voluntarily taken upon himself at his admission, that ye manifest yourselves as his accusers to restrain and to warn, so that ye, even ye, may perform your part in the operations of the Great Work through the Order. Thus therefore, do I charge and authorize ye through Yeheshua Yehovasha, the name of sacrifice.

Three adepts disjoin wands and cruces. Chief Adept steps out of Pastos.

Let the Pastos be placed without the Vault as in the third point of the ceremony of Adeptus Minor.

Pastos is carried out into the outer chamber. Lid is removed and placed beside it. Chief Adept stands between Pastos and lid facing door of Vault, his arms crossed. Second Adept stands at head of Pastos, and Third Adept at foot. Other adepts form a circle round, join wands over head of Chief Adept, then separate wands from head and give signs of 5° = 6th grade.

CH. AD: (Slowly and loudly) I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth on Me shall never die. I am the first and I am the last. I am he that liveth but was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, and hold the keys of hell and of death.

Chief Adept quits circle, Second Adept follows, then the other members, with Third Adept last. All enter the Vault and proceed round the altar with the sun. Chief Adept reads the sentences following and all halt in former positions, Chief Adept in centre, others round.

For I know that my redeemer liveth and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by Me. I am purified. I have passed through the gates of darkness unto light. I have fought upon earth for good. I have finished my work. I have entered into the invisible. I am the sun in His rising. I have passed through the hour of cloud and night. I am Amoun the concealed one, the opener of the day. I am Osiris Onnophris, the justified one. I am the lord of life, triumphant over death. There is no part of Me that is not of the gods. I am the preparer of the pathway, the rescuer unto the light! Out of the darkness, let the light arise.

At this point, the Chief Adept reaches the centre point between Pastos and lid. He faces towards the Vault, other adepts round him. They join wands over his head. He raises his face and hands and continues:

CH. AD: I am the reconciler with the ineffable. I am the dweller of the invisible. Let the white brilliance of the divine spirit descend.

Chief Adept lowers face and hands. Other adepts withdraw their wands.

(Raising his hand.) In the name and power of the divine spirit, I invoke ye, ye angels of the watchtowers of the universe. Guard this Vault during this revolution of the solar course. Keep far from it the evil and the uninitiated that they penetrate not into the abode of our mysteries, and inspire and sanctify all who enter this place with the illimitable wisdom of the light divine!

Chief Adept gives signs of $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$. All others copy and take their places as in the opening of the Vault.

Business to be conducted.

Closing Ceremony

Before the closing ceremony, Pastos is replaced in Vault. Altar is put over it. Door open.

THE SYMBOLISM OF THE SEVEN SIDES

by G.H. Frater N.O.M.³⁰

Among those characteristics which are truly necessary in the pursuit of magical knowledge and power, there is hardly any one more essential than thoroughness. And there is no failing more common in modern life than superficiality.

There are many who, even in this grade which has been gained by serious study, after being charmed and instructed by first view of the Vault of Christian Rosenkreutz, have made no attempt to study it as a new theme. There are many who have attended many ceremonial admissions and yet know nothing of the attribution of the seven sides, and nothing of the emblematic arrangement of the forty squares upon each side.

Some of you do not even know that Venus is in an astrological sense misplaced among the sides, and not two in five have been able to tell me why this is so, or what is the basis of the arrangement of the seven colours and forces. Many have told me which element out of the four is missing, and others have told me that the sign Leo occurs twice, but very few can tell me why the two forms of Leo are in different colours in each case, and only a few can tell me without hesitation which three Sephiroth have no planet attached.

And yet even in the $1^{\circ} = 10^{\square}$ grade you are told you must analyse and comprehend that light or knowledge, and not only take it on personal authority. Let us then be adepts in fact, and not only on the surface; let our investigations be more than skin deep. That only which you can demonstrate is really known to you, and that only which is comprehended can fructify and become spiritual progress as distinguished from intellectual gain. Unless you can perceive with the soul as well as see with the eye your progress is but seeming, and you will continue to wander in the wilds of the unhappy.

Let your maxim be multum non multa—much, rather than many things. And tremble lest the Master find you wanting in those things you allow it to be supposed that you have become proficient in. Hypocrisy does not become the laity; it is a fatal flaw in the character of the occultist. You know it is not only the teacher in this hall before whom you may be humiliated, but before your higher and divine genius who can in no wise be deceived by outward seeming, but judgeth you by the heart, in that your spiritual heart is but the reflection of his brightness and the image of his person, even as Malkuth is the material image of Tiphareth, and Tiphareth the reflection of the crowned wisdom of Kether, and the concealed One.

There is but a couple of pages in the 5° = 6° ritual which refer to the symbolism of the seven sides of the Vault. Read them over carefully, and then let us study these things together. First, the seven sides as a group, and then the forty squares that are on each side.

The seven sides are all alike in size and shape and subdivision, and the forty squares on each side bear the same symbols. But the colouring is varied in the extreme, no two sides are alike in tint, and none of the squares are identical in colour excepting the single central upper square of each wall, that square bearing the wheel of the spirit. The seven walls are under the planetary presidency, one side to each planet. The subsidiary squares represent the colouring of the combined forces of the planet; the symbol of each square is represented by the ground colour, while the symbol is in the colour contrasted or complementary to that of the ground.

Now these planetary sides are found to be in a special order, neither astronomical nor astrological. The common order of the succession of the planets is that defined by their relative distances from Earth, putting the sun, however, in Earth's place in the series thus: Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, sun, Venus, Mercury, moon. Saturn is farthest from the Earth, and the Earth is between Mars and Venus. Beginning with Saturn in the case of the walls of the Vault, the order is Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, sun, Mercury, Venus, moon. Here Mercury and Venus are transposed.

But there is something more than this. For Saturn, the farthest off, is neither the door nor the east, nor anywhere else that is obviously intended. For it is the corner between the south and the southwest sides. Nor is Luna, at the other end of the scale, in any notable position on the old lines.

There is, then, a new key to their order to be found and used, and such as are very intuitive see it at a glance. The planets are in the order of the rainbow colours, and in colours because this Adeptus Minor grade is the especial exponent of colours. You adepts are in the Path of the Chameleon—Hodos Chamelionis.

If now you take the planetary colours and affix the planets and arrange them in the order of the solar spectrum and then bend up the series into a ring and make the chain into a heptagram, and turn the whole about until you get the two ends of the series to meet at the eastern point, you will have this mysterium:

Violet—Jupiter.

Indigo—Saturn.

Blue—Moon.

Green—Venus.

Yellow—Mercury.

Orange—Sun.

Red—Mars.

Science teaches, and has rediscovered a great truth, that however valuable the seven colours of the prism may be, there are rays invisible and so not demonstrated here by space. Beyond the red end of the spectrum begins the violet, and these have a great chemical or Yetsiratic force. These forces, ever present and unseen, are represented by the Chief Adept standing erect at the eastern angle, the most powerful person in the group, and delegate of the chiefs of the Second Order, and through them of the mystic Third Order. He it is who has, symbolically, at any rate, passed from death unto life, and holds the keys of all the creeds. And he it is who may place in our hands the keys of the locked palace of the king if we are able to make our knocking heard. Representing the east, coming from the east, he faces the western world, bringing intuition with him; before him lies the symbolic body of our Master C.R.C., our grand exemplar and founder—or at other times, the empty Pastos, from which he has arisen, the Chief Adept.

He has Mars and Geburah at his right hand, and Jupiter and Gedulah at his left hand. He faces Venus in the west, the Evening Star, which represents the entry of the candidate who has toiled all day until the evening. At even he enters the western door of the planet Venus, that sole planet unto whose symbol alone all the Sephiroth are conformed. At “evening time there shall be light,” the light of the mixed colours. So the newly admitted adept comes in contact with the totality of the planetary forces for the first time. A great opportunity opens before him; let him see well that he use it worthily. He enters through the green side of the Vault. Green is the colour of growth; let him see that he grows.

Upon each side of the Vault are forty squares, five vertical series and eight horizontal, the whole being symbolically 5' x 8'. Now the published and printed Fama Fraternitatis ³¹ says these forty feet were divided into ten squares. If you are mathematicians you would know that ten similar squares could not alone be placed in such an area and yet fill it. Ten squares alone to fill a rectangle could only be placed in an area of the shape 5' x 6'. Hence in the Fama, ten squares is a blind which we know to represent “Ten squares are marked and salient”—they are the Sephiroth.

Besides the ten Sephiroth, there are the following: the four Kerubim, three alchemical principles, three elements, seven planets, twelve zodiacal signs, one wheel of the spirit—thus forty in all. The spirit wheel is on every side and always in the centre, and is always depicted unchanged in black upon white.

Upon the side there are always the four Kerubic emblems—zodiacal, yet different, for the eagle replaces Scorpio. (Scorpio has three forms, the scorpion, the eagle, and the snake for the evil aspect.)

These Kerubim represent the letters of the name YHVH, and note that they are always arranged in the Hebrew order of the letters. Yod for the lion, Heh for the eagle, Vau for the man, Heh final for the ox, the Tauric Earth.

Note that these four zodiacal signs are not in their own colours, but as symbols of the elements have elementary colours. As zodiacal signs, then, they are found to be compounds of the zodiacal and planet colours; but they are here as Kerubic emblems compounded of the elemental colour and the planetary colour of the side.

The three principles are composed of the colour of the principles, and the colour of the planet of any particular wall, Mercury being fundamentally blue, Sulphur red, and Salt yellow.

The three elements have fundamentally the usual three colours, fire red, water blue, air yellow. Note that earth is missing.

The seven planets have their colours as are often stated, and note that each of the seven is set beside its appropriate Sephirah, so that there are three Sephiroth which have no planet: Kether, Chokmah, and Malkuth.

The twelve zodiacal signs are the lower portion of the sides of the vertical column. The central one has none of the twelve; they are so allotted between the four remaining columns. Further note that they are only three ranks, the fifth, seventh, and eighth; none are in the sixth rank from above.

This arrangement then shows four triplicities and three quaternaries. Observe well the arrangement; it is complex but not confused.

1. Kerubic.	Fixed.	Shining Rank.
2. Cardinal.	Fiery.	Solar Rank.
3. Common (mutable).	Airy.	Subtle Rank.

From above down, or in columns, these are: earthy signs, airy signs, watery signs, fiery signs.

Rank 5. The Kerubic line shows the signs in the order of Tetragrammaton read in Hebrew.

Rank 7. The cardinal line shows the signs from the right in the order of astronomical sequence of the solar course: vernal equinox, summer solstice, autumn equinox, winter solstice.

Rank 8. The common line shows the signs again in a different position. Here the earliest in the year is Gemini on the left of Mem, and passing left to Virgo, you then go round to extreme right to Sagittarius, pass centrewards to Pisces close to Malkuth.

The colouring of each square is dual—a ground colour and the colour of the emblem. The ground colour is a compound of the colour of the planet of the side tinting the colour of the force to which the square is allotted.

Each side has the square of its own planet in its own unmixed colour, and with this exception all the coloured grounds are compound. The emblem colour is always complementary to the ground colour.

The ritual of the Adeptus Minor gives the definite colours of each planet and sign which are to be used in this system. There are other allotments of colour to each of these symbols and forces, but these are retained as mysteries yet to be evolved and revealed when you have become familiar with the present simple and elementary system.

CONCERNING THE USE OF THE VAULT

by G.H. Frater F.R.³²

The Vault of the Adepts may be said to represent or symbolize various things; first of course, it is the symbolic burying place of our founder C.R.C. It is also the mystic cavern in the sacred mountain of initiation, Abiegnus. Therefore it is the chamber of initiation wherein, after, passing through the preliminary training of the Outer, we are received into the Portal of the Vault of the Rose of Ruby and the Cross of Gold.

All who are eligible should use the Vault when it is in its place. When working it is well to be clothed in the white robe and yellow sash, yellow slippers, and yellow and white nemyss on your head. The Rose Cross should be upon the breast. Remember that within the Vault you never use a banishing ritual. The chamber is highly charged by the ceremonies which have been held there and the atmosphere thus created should not be disturbed.

At first I do not recommend you to fast as a preliminary, though later on when you set yourselves to attain some definite point, this may be necessary. Being then clothed, and at peace, you enter the Vault, light the candle, and kindle either a pastile in the small censer or, if you prefer it, some incense in the larger one. Place a chair as near east as you can, and having shut the door stand in the east, facing west, the door by which you entered, the wall bearing the symbol of Venus. Now cross your hands upon your breast in the Sign of Osiris Risen, breathe in a fourfold rhythm, regularly, and compose your mind. Then being calm and collected, make the full L.V.X. signs, repeating the accompanying words, and endeavour to bring down the divine white brilliance. Having done this, seat yourself, and give yourself up to meditation, tranquil and without fear. At first try to feel, it may be, or to see the play of the colours as they pass and repass from side to side and from square to square. Then await with serene expectation what message may be vouchsafed to you. When you are used to the place it is well to extinguish the light, for the darker the material atmosphere the better it is. Before leaving the Vault make the L.V.X. signs, and quit it with arms crossed upon breast in the Sign of Osiris Risen.

If you have elected to work in a group of two or three, proceed in the same manner, but take care to place yourselves in balanced disposition. Let me warn you never to argue, even in a friendly manner, while in the Vault. It may often happen that one of you sees more or less differently from the others. In this case make an audible note of the differences but do not go on to discuss it till you have ended the sitting, as any discussion is apt to disturb the delicate currents and so break the thread of your vision. It is permissible to take notes in writing during the sitting, but on the whole it is perhaps more satisfactory to impress everything clearly on your mind and write it down immediately afterward.

The next seven visits should be devoted to a careful study of each side of the Vault in turn, recalling all you know about each before you begin, and having your queries defined before you expect replies.

Another time, contemplate the roof, and if you feel strong enough, the floor. But it is best for you to have an advanced adept with you for the latter. Again you may draw aside the altar, lift the lid of the Pastos and contemplate the figure you may perceive lying within it. For this you should have a small candle lit on the altar. Or you may lie down in the Pastos yourself and meditate there. Sometimes you may see the simulacrum of C.R.C. in the Pastos, or it may be your own higher self. In every case you should gain knowledge, power, and satisfaction. If you do not, you may be sure you are either acting from a wrong motive, or you are not physically strong enough, or your methods are at fault. No normal person in a good state of mind can possibly spend half an hour in this way without feeling better for it. But if you should happen to be out of harmony with your surroundings or at variance with your neighbours, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled.

When more than one person enters the Vault they must all make the L.V.X. signs together.

32. Note by JMG: Dr. Robert W. Felkin, under his motto Finem Respice.

THE THREE CHIEFS

By Frater A.M.A.G.

The first temple founded in England in 1887–88 under the governance of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn was named very appropriately Isis-Urania. Isis-Urania is Venus, and she is the occult planet which represents the genius of this order—Venus, the evening and the morning star, presaging the rising of the sun of ineffable light. Venus is also, as Isis, a symbol of the Qabalistic Shekinah, the glory of the presence divine, the Holy Spirit. After the revolt in the order about 1900, the schismatic sect appropriated as the name of their order, Stella Matutina, the Morning Star, thus continuing the significance of the enlightening function and purpose for which the Order was founded originally. For, if one may speak of the Order as having a specific purpose, then that sublime motive is to bring each man to the perfection of his own Kether, to the glory of his own higher genius, to the splendour of the Golden Dawn arising within the heart of his soul. And its technique is always encompassed through the uplifting of the heart and mind by a theurgic invocation to Isis-Urania, the symbolic personification of the Sephiroth of the supernal light.

It is well known that Venus is a planet peculiarly associated with occult and mystical aspiration. In The Secret Doctrine we find Blavatsky stating that “Venus, or Lucifer, the planet, is the light-bearer of our Earth, in both a physical and mystical sense.” And in quoting from the Stanzas of Dzyan, she presents the statement that “Thus Earth is the adopted child and younger brother of Venus.” Hence a good deal of wisdom is concealed in the very choice of the name of the Order. To this we will have occasion to refer on a later page.

In the ritual of the grade of Adeptus Minor, the Third Adept, reading from the historical account of the origins of the Order, states that: “The true Order of the Rose Cross ascendeth into the heights even unto the Throne of God himself.” If the reader will well have studied the preliminary knowledge material of the Outer Order, he will remember it is said that the symbol of Venus—a true symbol of growth and development—embraces all the ten Sephiroth of the Qabalistic Tree of Life. Since the Order is under the presidency of Venus, and in view of the above quotation, it would seem that the Order considered from a variety of viewpoints is allied to the Tree of Life, and vice-versa. Thus the system of grades, and the division of the organisation into three separate Orders—the Order of the Golden Dawn in the Outer, the Second Order of the R.R. et A.C., and the unnamed Third Order of Masters, whose Sephiroth obtain above the Abyss—is based upon a natural and a very recondite series of correspondences. “As above so below.” So that as the Tree of Life consists of a glyph which represents not only a material physical universe but also a uranography of the invisible and spiritual world, so does the Order consist, in all actuality, of more than an external Order. Concealed within and behind the grade system, is the invisible Order of true adepts, unknown and, in most cases, unnamed Masters.

At the close of the second point of the $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$ ceremony, there are named, without further reference, the names and ages of the “three highest chiefs of the Order.” These chiefs are Hugo Alverda, whose age is given as 576, Franciscus, who died at the age of 495 years, and Elman Zata, who died at the age of 463. In addition to these three there is Christian Rosenkreutz, the founder who died at the age of 106 years.

These enormous ages, unbelievably long in the case of the three chiefs, imply—that is if we accept the history in its obvious and literal sense—that, as adepts, they had discovered and employed the secret of the elixir of life, in order to prolong the period of their usefulness on Earth. And though they have died, that is discarded their purely physical instruments, it is not to be supposed they are cut off from our sphere of activity. Such is not the occult teaching. Apart from the probability that they may have since incarnated voluntarily once more on this plane to continue their work on behalf of mankind in their own silent ways, they would have become what are known in the east as Nirmanakayas. Speaking in The Secret Doctrine of one group of adepts, Blavatsky gives a definition of Nirmanakayas which is distinctly worth quoting: “Maruts is, in occult parlance, one of the names given to those Egos of great Adepts who have passed away, and who are known also as Nirmanakayas; of those Egos for whom—since they are beyond illusion—there is no Devachan (heaven) and who, having either voluntarily renounced it for the good of mankind, or not yet reached Nirvana, remain invisible on Earth.” Such must therefore be the nature of the divine guardians of our Order. A few lines following the above quotation in The Secret Doctrine, Madame Blavatsky further remarks “Who they are ‘on earth’—every student of occult science knows.” Whether they do or not, at any rate, it is clear the Order has a little to say on this matter.

There is an enormous amount of significant material in The Secret Doctrine which should be very suggestive to the student of the magical wisdom. For The Secret Doctrine assists in the comprehension of the Order knowledge, and likewise the Order knowledge makes brilliantly clear what are otherwise highly obscure passages in that colossal monument of Blavatsky’s erudition. The only one of these points that I wish to consider at the moment is this question of adepts in relation to the Order. In the first half of Volume Two of The Secret Doctrine, there is a passage or two which I must quote: “Alone a handful of primitive men—in whom the spark of divine Wisdom burnt bright, and only strengthened in its intensity as it got dimmer and dimmer with every age in those who turned it to bad purposes—remained the elect custodians of the Mysteries revealed to mankind by the divine Teachers. There were those among them who remained in their Kumaric (divine purity) condition from the beginning; and tradition whispers, what the secret teachings affirm, namely, that these Elect were the germ of a Hierarchy, which never died since that period.” The magical tradition has it too that the three chiefs and Christian Rosenkreutz were of those who retained their knowledge of their divine origins and spiritual nature, and they have been constantly with us. The student would be well repaid to study what H.P.B. has to say in the first volume of The Secret Doctrine about the stem and root of initiators, that mysterious being who, born in the so-called third race of our evolutionary era, is called “the great sacrifice” and “the tree from which in subsequent ages, all the great historically known sages and hierophants ... have branched off.” More cannot be quoted here, but it is all highly significant, and the employment of Order methods corroborates a great deal of what she wrote. But I do intend to quote from what she calls the catechism of the inner schools, which deals still further with the theme of the secret chiefs of our Order, or the undying adepts of all ages. “The inner man of the first ... only changes his body from time to time; he is ever the same, knowing neither rest nor Nirvana, spurning Devachan, and remaining constantly on Earth for the Salvation of mankind ... Out of the seven virgin-men (Kumara) four sacrificed themselves for the sins of the world and the instruction of the ignorant, to remain until the end of the present Manvantara. Though unseen they are ever present. When people say of them, ‘He is dead,’ behold, he is alive and under another form. Thou shalt never speak, O Lanoo, of these great ones before a multitude, mentioning them by their names. The wise alone will understand.” Though I have little intention to speak of them more clearly, little harm can be done from what is already stated above, for the names used are clearly the pseudonyms or magical mottoes of those great beings.

If, however, we consider these chiefs from a wholly different point of view, the results are no less suggestive. Some students of the order have thought that these three chiefs may be considered as representative of certain principles in nature or as Sephiroth of the Tree of Life, particularly as it is said that the Order of the Rose Cross (the ankh or the Venus symbol) ascends even to the throne of God himself. How may we recover, then, what principles are involved, and why? Two hints are given in the Adeptus Minor ritual as to what procedure the student may follow in order to elucidate these obscure mysteries. Almost deliberately the ritual states, in the first place, that Damcar, whither our father C.R.C. journeyed, may be transliterated into Hebrew, thus yielding דמכר, two words which, if translated, mean “the blood of the lamb.” The lamb has always been a symbol of the higher ego. Secondly, there is the analysis of the keyword I.N.R.I., whereby the English letters are transliterated into Hebrew, attributed to certain Yetziratic correspondences, Egyptian deities, signs, and ideas. This must, then, be our technique with regard to this problem. The Qabalah is the means whereby we may unlock the closed doors of the veiled intimations which abound in the Order rituals.

Through the applications of this technique to the names and ages of the chiefs, one may reasonably conclude that, as the historical lection of the Third Adept showed, they represent the triune supernal light, the divine white brilliance invoked in the Vault of the Adepts—the letter Shin extended, bursting through the balanced elemental powers of Tetragrammaton to confer the attainment of the grade. If we transliterate the names into Hebrew, first of all, we have the following:

דונע	= 84 = 12 = 3 Binah	☊
האלמאן	= 776 = 20 = 2 Chokmah ³⁴	☋ ³⁵

Elman Zata is represented in the rituals as being an Arab; that is, his origins are in the south and east, representing heat and fire, and so the alchemical sulphur is a fit attribution. Sulphur is also an attribution of Chokmah, to which also the element of fire is allocated. Hugo is called the Phrisian. If we refer this to Frisia in Denmark, the north, then the alchemical salt is a proper reference—Binah, and the element of water, the great salt sea. Franciscus is the Gaul, which country is a point between the north and the south, a temperate zone. Hence he is the reconciler between them, a mediator, surely the alchemical mercury. Thus from this point of view, the gematria of the names of the three chiefs allies them with the light of the supernal Sephiroth, that light which ascendeth into the heights, even unto the throne of God himself.

Leaving, however, the gematria of their individual names for a moment, and proceeding to the Qabalah of the numbers of their ages, an equally interesting and significant fact is revealed.

Hugo's age is given as 576, which reduces to $18 = 9$.

Franciscus's age is given as 495, which reduces to $18 = 9$.

Elman's age is given as 463, which reduces to $13 = 4$.

Nine plus nine plus four added together equal twenty-two. Twenty-two is the number of the letters of the Hebrew alphabet, the totality of the paths linking the Sephiroth on the Tree of Life. This number also represents, therefore, the serpent of wisdom which rises from Malkuth to Kether, the ascending spiral, the path which the aspirant to the Great Order must tread. In short, the chiefs represent the path itself which is to be followed, even as they represent the goal which is at the end thereof. Each initiate, it is the universal tradition of the mystic path, must not only treat the way, but must become, even as did these three chiefs, that path itself.

By referring the number twenty-two in a slightly different way to the Qabalah of Nine Chambers, we may obtain 220, which is the gematria of Kor , the lamb, Abi-Agnus, the strength of our race—also the initials of Christian Rosenkreutz. Moreover, two plus two equals four, which is the number of Daleth, which means a door, referred to Venus, the symbolical figure which embraces the whole Tree of Life, revealing that compassion or love is that fiery force which binds together through an orderly growth and progression the whole Sephirotic scheme into a unity. And Daleth and Venus are the attributions of that door into the tomb of the justified one, the Vault of the Adepti, even as the reciprocal Path of Venus, Daleth, on the Tree of Life, is the secret gate which leads out from the garden of Venus into the newer life, the glory of the boundless light. The secret of that gate abides in the womb of the Great Mother, the intrinsic regenerating nature of the Empress of the tarot—Isis-Urania.

Again, there are other considerations. At the end of the Order document on the symbolism of the Neophyte grade there is the statement that “Nephesch ha-Mesiach, the Animal Soul of the Messiah” is “the Shekinah or presence between the Kerubim.” Note that the Shekinah represents, as I previously attempted to point out, Aima Elohim, the supernal Sephiroth as a synthetic unity, the divine white brilliance. Since this is spoken of as between the Kerubim, the Middle Pillar of the Tree, which is thus by definition the path of the redeemer or Messiah, the path of the Sushumna traversed by the Kundalini serpent is referred to. Now Messiah in Hebrew is spelt משיח and its gematria is 358. There is another word in Hebrew having precisely the same enumeration, and that word is נחש, nachash, meaning a serpent. As we demonstrated above, the ascending spiral is represented by the serpent of wisdom, which is the path of the twenty-two letters of the alphabet—and to this serpent are the ages of the three chiefs referred. Thus between the serpent of wisdom which represents the way to the crown, the Paths of the Tree of Life, and the power of the chiefs of the Order, there is seen a gematria connection. Interestingly enough, in all ancient systems, the serpent is also the tempter, Lucifer—and once again, Lucifer is Venus, the redeemer.

Thus the three chiefs of the Order of the R.R. et A.C. are the symbolic representatives of the way to that land which is beyond “honey, and spice and all perfection,” the way to the light itself. But they are also the light at the end of the way; they have become the divine attainment. How significant becomes the statement “I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me.”

There is one last correspondence before closing this paper. The symbolic drama of the Adeptus Minor ritual has as its goal the union of the aspirant with the divine nature of Christian Rosenkreutz. Theoretically, it is assumed that our Father C.R.C. is the type and symbol of spiritual attainment, a man who achieved union with his higher and divine genius, and was brought to the light of his Kether. He is portrayed as a living man, who symbolically died, and like Osiris of old, was glorified through trial, perfected through suffering, and rose again in a mystical resurrection. Now in the ritual, he is referred to as “The light of the cross” and this latter is pictorially shown as “I, CXX,” which is 120. The light of the cross, CXX, is of course the L.V.X., the light of the supernals. Now 120 reduces to twelve, and it is interesting to note that twelve is also the numeration of the great angel Hua who is invoked to overshadow the aspirant when he is bound to the cross of obligation. Hua is, in the Zohar, one of the mystical titles of Kether, the crown of the Tree. Analysis of the name expands the idea considerably. The name is composed of three letters, Heh, Vau, Aleph. Heh is five in number, the pentagram which is also the symbol of the microcosm. Vau is six, the hexagram, the symbol of the macrocosm, the greater world. Aleph is Unity. Thus the whole name symbolizes the union of the microcosm with macrocosm, and is a complete synthesis of the nature of the Adeptus Minor grade itself, the accomplishment of the Great Work. So that the very expression of C.R.C.—“I, the Light of the Cross,” with the implication of its number, identifies him mystically with the great angel Hua. Both become therefore the symbolic representatives of the higher and divine genius of the candidate for initiation—giving us the rationale of dramatic ceremonial, that the depicting of the life of a revered personality who at one time in the past attained, may also induce within the heart and mind of the aspirant the overwhelming glory of that same attainment.

It becomes peculiarly significant to trace out, in this slight way, the unity and identical nature of all the symbols employed, and show how by analogous methods and meditation the whole of the Order teaching may be expanded into a profound and highly significant system.³⁶

- 33 . Note by JMG: Unfortunately Regardie's math seems to be off here, as readers may find by adding up the value of the letters themselves; the sum comes to 501, not 541, and thus adds to 6, the number of Tiphareth.
- 34 . Note by JMG: Here again, Regardie's math is off, and the sum of this name comes to 780, which also adds to 6. It is possible that Regardie deliberately inserted an error here to see if any of his readers were paying enough attention to catch it!
35. Note by Regardie: It may be here remarked that the method of reducing numbers to units as shown above, while often called Theosophical addition, is actually the mode of working called Aiq Beker, or the Qabalah of Nine Chambers. By this method of Aiq Beker, the twenty-two letters and five finals of the Hebrew alphabet are grouped together by threes according to units, tens, and hundreds in nine divisions.
36. Note by Regardie: Since there is no need for me to hide behind a cloak of anonymity, this essay was written by me soon after my advancement to the Adeptus Minor grade. A.M.A.G. are the initials of the motto Ad Majorem Adonai Gloriam, which I then employed.

THE RITUAL OF THE PENTAGRAM

The pentagram is a powerful symbol representing the operation of the eternal spirit and the four elements under the divine presidency of the letters of the name Yeheshuah. The elements themselves in the symbol of the cross are governed by YHVH. But the letter Shin, representing the Ruach Elohim, the Divine Spirit, being added thereto, the name becometh Yeheshuah or Yehovashah—the latter when the letter Shin is placed between ruling earth and the other three letters of Tetragrammaton.

From each re-entering angle of the pentagram, therefore, issueth a ray, representing a radiation from the divine. Therefore is it called the flaming pentagram, or star of great light, in affirmation of the forces of divine light to be found therein.

Traced as a symbol of good, it should be placed with the single point upward, representing the rule of the Divine Spirit. For if thou shouldst write it with the two points upward, it is an evil symbol, affirming the empire of matter over that Divine Spirit which should govern it. See that thou doest it not.

Yet, if there may arise an absolute necessity for working or conversing with a spirit of evil nature, and that to retain him before thee without tormenting him, thou hast to employ the symbol of the pentagram reversed—for, know thou well, thou canst have no right to injure or hurt even evil spirits to gratify curiosity or caprice—in such a case, thou shalt hold the blade of thy magical sword upon the single lowest point of the pentagram, until such time as thou shalt license him to depart. Also, revile not evil spirits—but remember that the archangel Michael of whom St. Jude speaketh, when contending with Satan, durst not bring a railing accusation against him, but said, “The Lord rebuke thee.”

Now, if thou wilt draw the pentagram to have by thee as a symbol, thou shalt make it of the colours already taught, upon a black ground. There shall be the sign of the pentagram, the wheel, the lion, the eagle, the ox, and the man, and each hath an angle assigned unto it for dominion. Hence ariseth the Supreme Ritual of the Pentagram, according to the angle from which the pentagram is traced. The circle or wheel answereth to the all-pervading spirit: the laborious ox is the symbol of earth; the lion is the vehemence of fire; the eagle, the water flying aloft as with wings when she is vaporized by the force of heat; the man is the air, subtle and thoughtful, penetrating hidden things.

At all times complete the circle of the place before commencing an invocation. The currents leading from fire to air and from earth to water are those of spirit—the mediation of the active and passive elements. These two spirit pentagrams should precede and close invocations as the equilibrium of the elements, and in establishing the harmony of their influence. In closing, these currents are reversed.

They are the invoking and banishing pentagrams of the spirit; the sigil of the wheel should be traced in their centre. In the invoking pentagram of earth the current descendeth from the spirit to the earth. In the banishing pentagram, the current is reversed. The sigil of the ox should be traced in the centre. These two pentagrams are in general use for invocation or banishing, and their use is given to the Neophyte of the First Order of the Golden Dawn under the title of the Lesser Ritual of the Pentagram. This Lesser Ritual of the Pentagram is only of use in general and unimportant invocations. Its use is permitted to the Outer that Neophytes may have protection against opposing forces, and also that they may form some idea of how to attract and to come into communication with spiritual and invisible things. The banishing pentagram of earth will also serve thee for a protection if thou trace it in the air between thee and any opposing astral force. In all cases of tracing a pentagram, the angle should be carefully closed at the finishing point.

The invoking pentagram of air commenceth from water, and that of water commenceth from the angle of air. Those of fire and earth begin from the angle of spirit. The Kerubic sign of the element is to be traced in the centre. The banishing signs are the reversing of the current. But before all things, complete the circle of the place wherein thou workest, seeing that it is the key of the rest. Unless you want to limit or confine the force, make not a circle round each pentagram, unless for the purpose of tracing the pentagram truly. In concentrating however the force upon a symbol or talisman, thou shalt make the circle with the pentagram upon it so as to gather the force together thereon.

Rule: Invoke towards, and banish from, the point to which the element is attributed.

Air hath a watery symbol zaqua, because it is the container of rain and moisture. Fire hath the form of the Lion-Serpent zleo. Water hath the alchemic Eagle of distillation.  Earth hath the laborious ztaur. Spirit is produced by the One operating in all things.

The elements vibrate between the cardinal points for they have not an unchangeable abode therein, though they are allotted to the four quarters in their invocation in the ceremonies of the First Order. This attribution is derived from the nature of the winds. For the easterly wind is of the nature of air more especially. The south wind bringeth into action the nature of fire. West winds bring with them moisture and rain. North winds are cold and dry like earth. The southwest wind is violent and explosive—the mingling of the contrary elements of fire and water. The northwest and southeast winds are more harmonious, uniting the influence of the two active and passive elements.

Yet their natural position in the zodiac is: fire in the east, earth in the south, air in the west, and water in the north. Therefore they vibrate: air between west and east. Fire between east and south. Water between north and west. Earth between south and north. Spirit also vibrateth between height and depth.

Elemental Pentagrams

So that, if thou invokest, it is better to look towards the position of the winds, since the earth, ever whirling on her poles, is more subject to their influence. But if thou wilt go in the spirit vision unto their abode, it is better for thee to take their position in the zodiac.

Air and water have much in common, and because one is the container of the other, therefore have their symbols been at all times transferred, and the eagle assigned to air and Aquarius to water. Nevertheless, it is better that they should be attributed as before stated and for the foregoing reason is it that the invoking sign of the one and the banishing sign of the other counterchange in the pentagram.

When thou dealest with the pentagram of the spirit thou shalt give the saluting sign of the $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$ grade, and for the earth the sign of Zelator, and for air that of Theoricus, and for water that of Practicus, and for fire Philosophus.

If thou wilt use the pentagram to invoke or banish the zodiacal forces, thou shalt use the pentagram of the element unto which the sign is referred, and trace in its centre the usual sigil of the sign thus:

Zodiacal Pentagrams

And whenever thou shalt trace a sigil of any nature, thou must commence at the left hand of the sigil or symbol following the course of the sun.

Whenever thou invokest the forces of the zodiacal signs as distinct from the elements, thou shalt erect an astrological scheme of the heavens for the time of working so that thou mayest know towards what quarter or direction thou shouldst face in working. For the same sign may be in the east at one time of the day and in the west at another.

Whenever thou shalt prepare to commence any magical work or operation, it will be advisable for thee to clear and consecrate the place by performing the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram. In certain cases, especially when working by or with the forces of the planets, it may be wise also to use the active and passive invoking pentagrams of spirit.

In order that a force and a current and a colour and a sound may be united together in the same symbol, unto each angle of the pentagram certain Hebrew divine names and names from the Angelic Tablets are allotted. These are to be pronounced with the invoking and banishing pentagrams as thou mayest see in the foregoing diagrams.

The attributions of the angles of the pentagram is the key of its ritual. Herein, during ordinary invocation without the use of the tablets of the elements, thou shalt pronounce the divine name Al with the pentagram of water, and Elohim with fire, etc. But if thou art working with the Elemental or Enochian Tablets, thou shalt use the divine names in the angelic language drawn therefrom. For earth, Emor Dial Hectega, etc., and for spirit the four words: Exarp in the east; Hcoma in the west; Nanta in the north; and Bitom in the south.

In the pronunciation of all these names, thou shalt take a deep breath and vibrate them as much as possible inwardly with the outgoing breath, not necessarily loudly, but with vibration thus: A-a-a-el-ll. Or—Em-or-r Di-a-ll Hec-te-e-g-ah. If thou wilt, thou mayest also trace the letters or sigils of these names in the air.

To invoke the forces of the four elements at once, at the four quarters, commence at the east and there trace the equilibrating pentagram of the actives and the invoking pentagram of air and pronounce the proper names. Then carry round the point of thy wand to the south and there trace the equilibrating pentagram for actives and the invoking pentagram of fire and pronounce the proper names. Thence, pass to the west, trace the equilibrating pentagram for passives and the invoking pentagram for water and pronounce the proper names; thence to the north, trace the equilibration of the passives and the invoking pentagram of earth, pronounce the proper names, and then complete the circle of the place.

In the same manner shalt thou banish, unless thou desirest to retain certain of the forces for a time. All invocations shall be opened and closed with the Qabalistic sign of the cross. In certain cases other names, as those of angels and spirits, may be pronounced towards their proper quarters and their names and sigils traced in the air.

If thou workest with but one element, thou shalt make—if it be an active element as fire or air—the equilibrating pentagram for actives only and the element's own invoking pentagram, and not those of the other elements. If it be a passive element—earth or water—thou shalt make the equilibrating pentagram of the passives only and the invoking pentagram of the one element at the four quarters. In closing and banishing follow the same law. Also, see that thou pronounce the proper names with the proper pentagrams.

Supreme Invoking Ritual of the Pentagram

Face east. Make Qabalistic cross.

Make equilibrated active pentagram of spirit.

Vibrate Exarp in making pentagram.

Vibrate Eheieh in making wheel.

Finish with the $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$ signs.

Make the invoking pentagram of air.

Vibrate Oro Ibah Aozpi in making pentagram.

Vibrate YHVH in making Aquarius symbol.

Finish with the $2^{\circ} = 9^{\square}$ sign.

Carry point to south:

Make equilibrated active pentagram of spirit.

Vibrate Bitom in making pentagram.

Vibrate Eheieh in making wheel.

Give $5^\circ = 6^\square$ signs.

Make the invoking pentagram of fire.

Vibrate Oip Teaa Podoce in making pentagram.

Vibrate Elohim in making Leo sigil.

Make the $4^\circ = 7^\square$ sign.

Carry point to west:

Make equilibrated passive pentagram of spirit.

Vibrate Hcoma in making pentagram.

Vibrate Agla in making Wheel.

Give $5^\circ = 6^\square$ signs.

Make invoking pentagram of water.

Vibrate Empeh Arsel Gaiol in making pentagram.

Vibrate Al in making eagle head.

Make the $3^\circ = 8^\square$ sign.

Carry point to north:

Make equilibrated passive pentagram of spirit.

Vibrate Nanta in making pentagram.

Vibrate Agla in making wheel.

Give $5^\circ = 6^\square$ signs.

Make invoking pentagram of earth.

Vibrate Emor Dial Hectega in making pentagram.

Vibrate Adonai in making Taurus.

Give $1^\circ = 10^\square$ sign.

Finish in east as in lesser pentagram ritual with the four archangels and Qabalistic cross.

THE RITUAL OF THE HEXAGRAM

The hexagram is a powerful symbol representing the operation of the seven planets under the presidency of the Sephiroth, and of the letters of the seven-lettered name Ararita. The hexagram is sometimes called the signet or symbol of the macrocosm, just as the pentagram is called the signet star or symbol of the microcosm.

Ararita is a divine name of seven letters formed of the Hebrew initials of the sentence: “One is his beginning. One is his individuality. His permutation is one.”

As in the case of the pentagram, each re-entering angle of the hexagram issueth a ray representing a radiation from the divine. Therefore it is called the flaming hexagram, or the six-rayed signet star. Usually, it is traced with the single point uppermost. It is not an evil symbol with the two points upward, and this is a point of difference from the pentagram.

Now if thou dost draw the hexagram to have by thee as a symbol, thou shalt make it in the colours already taught and upon a black ground. These are the planetary powers allotted unto the angles of the hexagram.

		(King Scale)	(Queen Scale)
Unto the uppermost:	♄	Indigo	Black
Unto the lowermost:	♅	Blue	Puce
Unto the right hand upper:	♆	Violet	Blue
Unto the right hand lower:	♇	Green	Green
Unto the left hand upper:	♈	Red	Red
Unto the left hand lower:	♉	Yellow	Orange
In the centre is the fire of the sun:	☼	Orange	Golden

The order of attribution is that of the Sephiroth on the Tree of Life. Hence ariseth the Supreme Ritual of the Hexagram according to the angles from which it is traced.

The uppermost angle answereth also to Daath and the lowest to Yesod, and the other angles to the remaining angles of the Microprosopus. The hexagram is composed of the two angles of fire and water, and is therefore not traced in one continuous line like the pentagram, but by each triangle separately. All the invoking hexagrams follow the course of the sun in their current—that is from left to right. But the banishing hexagrams are traced from right to left from the same angle as their respective invoking hexagrams contrary to the course of the sun. The hexagram of any particular planet is traced in two triangles, the first starting from the angle of the planet, the second opposite to the commencing angle of the first. The symbol of the planet itself is then traced in the centre. Thus in the case of the invoking hexagrams of Saturn, the first triangle is traced from the angle of Saturn, following the course of the sun, the second triangle from the angle of the moon. (Only trace the central planetary symbol in practice—the others are shown only for illustration.)

But the invoking hexagram of the moon is first traced from the angle of the moon, its second angle being traced from the triangle of Saturn. The banishing hexagram for Jupiter, for example, is traced from the same angle as the invoking hexagram, and in the same order, but reversing the current's direction. In all cases the symbol of the planet should be traced in the centre.

But for the sun all six invoking hexagrams of the planets should be traced in their regular planetary order and the symbol zsun traced in the centre. And for his banishing hexagram also, all the six banishing hexagrams of the other planets should be employed in their regular order, only that the symbol of the sun should be traced therein.

Remember that the symbol of Luna varieth, and as zmoon in her increase she is favourable. But ☾ is not so favourable for good in her decrease. The symbol of Luna in the centre of the hexagram should be traced zmoon if in her increase; by zxmoon if in her decrease. Remember that zxmoon represents restriction and is not so good a symbol as zmoon, and at the full moon exactly it is ☉, but at new moon a dark circle ●.

The last two forms of Luna are not good in many cases. If thou wilt invoke the forces of the head of the dragon of the moon ¹ thou shalt trace the lunar invoking hexagram and write therein the symbol ♀, and for the tail ♂. These forces of zxuu and zxu are more easy to be invoked when either the sun or the moon is with them in the zodiac in conjunction. In these invocations thou shalt pronounce the same names and letters as are given with the lunar hexagram zxuu is of a benevolent character, and zxuof a malefic, save in a very few matters. And be thou well wary of dealing with these forces of zxu and zxuu or with those of Sol and Luna during the period of an eclipse; for they are the powers of an eclipse. For an eclipse to take place both the sun and moon must be in conjunction with them in the zodiac, these two luminaries being at the same time either in conjunction or opposition as regards each other.

In all rituals of the hexagram as in those of the pentagram, thou shalt complete the circle of the place. Thou shalt not trace an external circle round each hexagram itself unless thou wishest to confine the force to one place—as in charging a symbol or talisman.

From the attribution of the planets, one to each angle of the hexagram, shalt thou see the reason of the sympathy existing between each superior planet and one certain inferior planet. That is, that to which it is exactly opposite in the hexagram. And for this reason is it that the triangle of their invoking and banishing hexagrams counterchange. The superior planets are Saturn, Jupiter, and Mars. The inferior planets are Venus, Mercury, and Luna. And in the midst is placed the fire of the sun. Therefore the superior Saturn and the inferior Luna are sympathetic, so are Jupiter and Mercury, Mars and Venus.

Invoking Hexagrams of the Sun

Banishing Hexagrams of the Sun

In the Supreme Ritual of the Hexagram the signs of the $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$ grade are to be given, but not those of the grades of the First Order, notwithstanding these latter are made use of in the Supreme Ritual of the Pentagram. And because the hexagram is the signet star of the macrocosm or greater world, therefore is it to be employed in all invocations of the forces of the Sephiroth: though the signet star of the pentagram represents their operation in the lunar world, in the elements, and in man.

If thou wilt deal with the forces of the supernal triad of the Sephiroth, thou shalt make use of the hexagrams of Saturn; for Chesed those of Jupiter, for Geburah those of Mars; for Tiphareth those of the sun, for Netzach those of Venus, for Hod those of Mercury, and for Yesod and Malkuth those of the moon.

Know also that the Sephiroth are not to be invoked on every slight occasion, but only with due care and solemnity. Above all, the forces of Kether and Chokmah demand the greatest purity and solemnity of heart and mind in him who would penetrate their mysteries. For such high knowledge is only to be obtained by him whose genius can stand in the presence of the holy ones. See that thou usest the divine names with all reverence and humility for cursed is he that taketh the name of the Vast One in vain.

When thou tracest the symbol of a planet in the centre of a hexagram, thou shalt make the same of a proportionable size to the interior of the hexagram, and thou shalt trace them from left to right generally following the course of the sun as much as possible. Caput and Cauda Draconis may follow the general rule.

When thou shalt invoke either the forces of one particular planet or those of them all, thou shalt turn thyself towards the quarter of the zodiac where the planet thou invokest then is. For owing both to their constant motion in the zodiac and to the daily movement of the same, the position of a planet is continually changing, and therefore it is necessary for thee in such a case to erect an astrological figure or scheme of the position of the planets in the heavens for the actual time of working, so that thou mayest see the direction of each planet from thee.² This is even more necessary when working with the planets than with the signs of the zodiac.

When thou shalt desire to purify or consecrate any place, thou shalt perform the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Hexagram, either in conjunction with, or instead of that of the pentagram, according to the circumstances of the case. For example, if thou hast been working on the plane of the elements before, it will be well to perform the Lesser Ritual of the Pentagram before proceeding to work of a planetary nature, so as thoroughly to clear the places of forces which, although not hostile or evil of themselves, will yet not be in harmony with those of an altogether different plane. And ever be sure that thou dost complete the circle of the place wherein thou workest.

The Four Forms

These are the four forms assumed by conjoining the two triangles of the hexagram on which the Lesser Ritual of the Hexagram is based. The first form is:

The angles are attributed as in the diagram. Its affinity is with the eastern quarter, the position of fire in the zodiac. (Note: To form these from the usual hexagram, lower the inverted triangle, then reverse it by throwing the lunar angle up to top from being lowest. Mars and Jupiter do not change sides.)

The second form is the ordinary hexagram with the attribution of the angles as usual: the affinity being rather with the southern quarter, the position of earth in the zodiac, and of the sun at his culmination at noon.

The third form is:

Hexagram of Air

The angles are attributed as shown and its affinity is with the western quarter, the position of air in the zodiac.

The fourth form is:

Hexagram of Water

The angles are attributed as shown and its affinity is with the northern quarter, the position of water in the zodiac.

With each of these forms the name Ararita is to be pronounced—seven letters.

Also as in the preceding cases there will be seven modes of tracing each of these four forms, according to the particular planet with those forces thou art working at the time.

The hexagrams of Saturn may be used in general and comparatively unimportant operations, even as the pentagrams of earth are used in the Lesser Ritual of the Pentagram. In these four forms of the hexagram thou shalt trace them beginning at the angle of the planet under whose regimen thou art working, following the course of the sun to invoke, and reversing the course to banish. That is to say, working from left to right for the former and from right to left for the latter. Remember always that the symbols of the elements are not usually traced on sigils but are replaced by the Kerubic emblems of Aquarius, Leo, Taurus, and the eagle head.

The Lesser Ritual of the Hexagram

Commence with the Qabalistic sign of the cross as in the Lesser Ritual of the Pentagram, and use what manner of magical implement may be necessary according to the manner of working, either the lotus wand or the magical sword.

Stand facing east. If thou desirest to invoke thou shalt trace the figure thus:

Invoking Hexagram of Fire

Following the course of the sun, from left to right, and thou shalt pronounce the name Ararita, vibrating it as much as possible with thy breath and bringing the point of the magical implement to the centre of the figure.

But if thou desirest to banish thou shalt trace it thus:

From right to left, and see that thou closest carefully the finishing angle of each triangle.

Carry thy magical implement round to the south, and if thou desirest to invoke trace the figure thus:

Earth

But if to banish then from left to right thus:

Bring as before the point of thy magical implement to the centre and pronounce the name Ararita.

Pass to the west, and trace the figure for invoking thus:

Banishing thus:

Then to the north, invoking:

Banishing:

Then pass round again to the east so as to complete the circle of the place wherein thou standest, then give the L.V.X. signs and repeat the analysis of the password I.N.R.I. of the 5° = 6th grade.

Addendum

Now in the Supreme Ritual of the Hexagram, when thou shalt wish to attract in addition to the forces of a planet, those of a sign of the zodiac wherein he then is, thou shalt trace in the centre of the invoking hexagram of the planet, the symbol of that sign of the zodiac beneath his own; and if this be not sufficient, thou shalt also trace the invoking pentagram of the sign as it is directed in the ritual of the pentagram.

In the tracing of the hexagram of any planet thou shalt pronounce therewith in a vibratory manner as before taught, both the divine name of the Sephirah which ruleth the planet and the seven-lettered name Ararita, and also the particular letter of that name which is referred to that particular planet.

Now if thou shalt wish to invoke the forces of one particular planet, thou shalt find in what quarter of the heavens he will be situated at the time of working. Then thou shalt consecrate and guard the place wherein thou art by the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Hexagram. Then thou shalt perform the Lesser Invoking Ritual of the Hexagram, yet tracing the four figures employed from the angle of the planet required, seeing that for each planet the mode of tracing varieth. If thou dealest with the sun, thou shalt invoke by all six forms of the figure and trace within them the planet symbol and pronounce the name Ararita as has been taught.

Then shalt thou turn unto the quarter of the planet in the heavens and shalt trace his invoking hexagram and pronounce the proper names, and invoke what angels and forces of that nature may be required, and trace their sigils in the air.

When thou hast finished thy invocation thou shalt in most cases license them to depart and perform the banishing ritual of the planet which shall be the converse of the invoking one. But in cases of charging a tablet or symbol or talisman, thou shalt not perform the banishing symbols upon it which would have the effect of entirely discharging it and reducing it to the condition it was in when first made—that is to say dead and lifeless.

If thou wishest to bring the rays of all or several of the planets into action at the same time, thou shalt discover their quarter in the heavens for the time of working, and thou shalt trace the general Lesser Invoking Ritual of the Hexagram, but not differentiated for any particular planet, and then thou shalt turn to the quarters of the respective planets and invoke their forces as before laid down; and banish them when the invocation is finished, and conclude with the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Hexagram. And ever remember to complete the circle of the place wherein thou workest, following the course of the sun.

1. Note by JMG: That is, Caput Draconis, the north node of the moon.
 2. Note by JMG: Adepts of the original Golden Dawn were expected to be able to erect (or, as we now say, cast) an astrological chart whenever needed. When such a chart is placed on the altar with the ascendant to the east, the positions of the planets in the chart indicate their symbolic position relative to the place where the working is performed.

THE LOTUS WAND³

This is for general use in magical working. It is carried by the Zelator Adeptus Minor at all meetings of the Second Order at which he has the right to be present. It is to be made by himself unassisted, and to be consecrated by himself alone. It is to be untouched by any other person and kept wrapped in white silk or linen, free from external influences other than his own on the human plane.

The wand has the upper end white, the lower black. Between these are the twelve colours referring to the zodiacal signs, in the positive or masculine scale of colour. At the upper end of the white is fixed a lotus flower in three whorls of twenty-six petals: the outer eight, the middle eight, and the innermost ten. The calyx has four lobes or sepals of orange colour. The flower centre is orange or gold. The lotus wand should be from twenty-four to forty inches long, and of wood about half an inch thick. The several bands of white, twelve colours, and black may be painted or enamelled or formed of coloured papers pasted on.

The length of colours should be such that the white is a little the longest, then the black, while the twelve colours are equal, and smaller than the black. The colours must be clear, brilliant, and correct. They are as follows:

White: Aries—red: Taurus—red-orange: Gemini—orange: Cancer—amber: Leo—lemon-yellow: Virgo—yellow-green: Libra—emerald: Scorpio—green-blue: Sagittarius —bright-blue: Capricornus—indigo: Aquarius—violet: Pisces—crimson: black.

The lotus flower may be made of sheet metal or cardboard, in three whorls of eight, eight, and ten petals, white internally and tips curved in a little, olive outside with five markings as shown in diagram. The centre is orange, or a brass bolt to keep all together will do.

As a general rule, use the white end in invocation and the black end to banish. The white end may be used to banish by tracing a banishing symbol against an evil and opposing force which has resisted other efforts. By this is meant that by whatever band you are holding the wand, whether white for spiritual things, by black for mundane, by blue for Sagittarius or by red for fiery triplicity, you are, when invoking, to direct the white extremity to the quarter desired. When banishing, point the black end to that quarter. The wand is never to be inverted, so that when very material forces are concerned, the black end may be the most suitable for invocation, but with the greatest caution.

In working on the plane of the zodiac, hold the wand by the portion you refer to between the thumb and two fingers.

If a planetary working be required, hold the wand by the portion representing the day or night house of the planet, or else by the sign in which the planet is at the time.

♄	day house—Capricorn	night house—Aquarius
♐	day house—Sagittarius	night house—Pisces
♈	day house—Aries	night house—Scorpio
♎	day house—Libra	night house—Taurus
♊	day house—Gemini	night house—Virgo
Sol ☉ in Leo only		Luna ☾ in Cancer only

For example, if Venus be the planet referred to, use in the day Libra, and in the night Taurus.

Should the action be with the elements, one of the signs of the triplicity of the elements should be held according to the nature of the element intended to be invoked. Bear in mind that the Kerubic emblem is the most powerful action of the element in the triplicity. For example, Leo—violent heat of summer. Aries—beginning of warmth in spring. Sagittarius—waning of heat in autumn.

Hold the wand by the white portion for all divine and spiritual matters or for the Sephirothic influences, and for the process of rising on the planes.

Hold the wand by the black part only for material and mundane matters.

The ten upper and inner petals refer to the purity of the ten Sephiroth. The middle eight refer to the countercharged natural and spiritual forces of air and fire. The lowest and outer eight refer to the powers of earth and water. The centre and amber portion refers to the spiritual sun, while the outer calyx of four orange sepals shows the action of the sun upon the life of things by differentiation.

The wand should never be used inverted. The lotus flower is not to be touched in working, but in Sephirotic and spiritual things, the flower is to be inclined towards the forehead; and to rise on the planes, the orange-coloured centre is to be fully directed to the forehead.

Consecration of the Lotus Wand

1. Provide a private room, white triangle, red cross of six squares. Incense, a rose, water in a vase, lamp or vessel of fire, salt on a platter, and an astrological figure of the heavens for the time of consecration. If possible a set of astrological symbolic diagrams of the twelve signs should be set around the room. Have ready also the Ritual of the Pentagram, new wand, white silk or linen wrapper, table with black cover for altar.

2. Find position of east.

3. Prepare an invocation of the forces of the signs of the zodiac.

4. Place altar in centre of room, cover it with black.

5. Arrange upon it the cross and triangle. Incense and rose in east above cross and triangle; lamp in south; cup in west; salt in north.

6. Illumine lamp.

7. Stand, holding new wand at west of altar, facing east.

8. Grasp wand by black portion and say:

9. Hekas! Hekas! Este Bebeloi.

10. Perform the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram.

11. Purify room first with water, then with fire, as in the $0^\circ = 0^\square$ grade, repeating as you do so these two passages from the ritual of the thirty-first Path. (With water say): So therefore first the priest who governeth the works of fire, must sprinkle with lustral water of the loud resounding sea. (With fire say): And when, after all the phantoms are vanished, thou shalt see that holy and formless fire, that fire which darts and flashes through the hidden depths of the universe, hear thou the voice of fire.

12. Take up the wand again, by white portion. Circumambulate the room three times and, at the end, repeat the adoration of the Lord of the Universe as in the ritual of the $0^{\circ} = 0^{\square}$ grade, saluting at each adoration with the Neophyte sign, and at "Darkness" giving the Sign of Silence.

Holy art thou, Lord of the Universe.

Holy art Thou whom nature hath not formed.

Holy art Thou, the vast and the mighty one,

Lord of the light and of the darkness.

13. Perform the Supreme Invoking Ritual of the Pentagram at the four quarters of the room, tracing the proper pentagrams at each quarter and pronouncing the appropriate angelic and divine names, taking care to give the grade sign appropriate to each element.

14. Stand then in the eastern quarter, facing east, hold wand by white portion, give $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$ signs, look upward, hold wand on high, and say:

O Harpocrates, lord of silence, who art enthroned upon the lotus.

Twenty-six are the petals of the lotus, flower of thy wand. O Lord of creation, they are the number of Thy name.

In the name of Yod He Vau He, let the divine light descend!

15. Facing consecutively the quarter where each sign is according to the horary figure for the time of working, repeat in each of the twelve directions the invocation which follows, using the appropriate divine and angelic names and letters for each specially. Beginning with Aries, hold the wand at the appropriate coloured band, and in the left hand the element, from off the altar, which is referred to the particular sign, and say:

The heaven is above and the earth is beneath. And betwixt the light and the darkness the colours vibrate. I supplicate the powers and forces governing the nature, place, and authority of the sign Aries, by the majesty of the divine name Yod He Vau He, with which, in earth life and language, I ascribe the letter Heh, to which is allotted the symbolic tribe of Gad and over which is the angel Melchidael, to bestow this present day and hour, and confirm their mystic and potent influence upon the red band of this lotus wand, which I hereby dedicate to purity and to occult work, and may its grasp strengthen me in the work of the character of Aries and his attributes.

As this is recited, trace in the air with the lotus end, the invoking pentagram of the sign required, and hold the corresponding element from the altar in the left hand, while facing in each of the twelve zodiacal directions.

16. Lay wand on the altar, lotus end towards the east.

17. Stand at west of altar, face east, raise hands, and say:

O Isis! Great goddess of the forces of nature, let thine influence descend and consecrate this wand which I dedicate to thee for the performance of the works of the magic of light.

18. Wrap the wand in silk or linen.

19. Purify the room by water and by fire as at first.

20. Perform reverse circumambulation.

21. Standing at west of altar, face east, and recite:

In the name of Yeheshuah, I now set free the spirits that may have been imprisoned by this ceremony.

22. Preferably, perform the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram.

THE RITUAL OF THE ROSE CROSS

1. Light a stick of incense. Go to the southeast corner of the room. Make a large cross and circle, as in the diagram, and holding the point of the incense in the centre vibrate the word Yeheshuah.

Cross and Circle

2. With arm outstretched on a level with the centre of the cross, and holding the incense stick, go to the southwest corner and make a similar cross, repeating the word.

3. Go to the northwest corner and repeat the cross and the word.

4. Go to the northeast corner and repeat the cross and the word.

5. Complete your circle by returning to the southeast corner and bringing the point of the incense to the central point of the first cross which you should imagine astrally there.

6. Holding the stick on high, go to the centre of the room, walking diagonally across the room towards the northwest corner. In the centre of the room, above your head, trace the cross and circle and vibrate the name.

7. Holding the stick on high, go to the northwest and bring the point of the stick down to the centre of the astral cross there.

8. Turn towards the southeast and retrace your steps there, but now holding the incense stick directed towards the floor. In the centre of the room, make the cross and circle towards the floor, as it were, under your feet, and vibrate the name.

9. Complete this circle by returning to the southeast and bringing the point of the stick again to the centre of the cross, then move with arm outstretched to southwest corner.

10. From the centre of this cross, and, raising stick before, walk diagonally across the room towards the northeast corner. In the centre of the room, pick up again the cross above your head previously made, vibrating the name. It is not necessary to make another cross.

11. Bring the stick to the centre of the northeast cross and return to the southwest, incense stick down, and pausing in the centre of the room to link up with the cross under your feet.

12. Return to the southwest and rest the point of the incense a moment in the centre of the cross there. Holding the stick out, retrace your circle to the northwest, link on to the northwest cross; proceed to the northeast cross and complete your circle by returning to the southeast, and the centre of the first cross.

13. Retrace the cross, but larger, and make a big circle, vibrating for the lower half Yeheshuah, and for the upper half Yehovashah.

14. Return to the centre of the room, and visualise the six crosses in a network round you. This ceremony can be concluded by the analysis of the keyword given as follows:

Analysis of the Keyword

1. Stand with arms outstretched in the form of a cross. Face east.

2. Vibrate these words:

I.	N.	R.	I.
Yod	Nun	Resh	Yod

The Sign of Osiris Slain.

3. Right arm up, left arm extended out from shoulder, head bowed towards left hand.

L.—The Sign of the Mourning of Isis.

4. Both arms up in a V shape.

V.—The Sign of Typhon and Apophis.

5. Arms crossed on breast, head bowed.

X.—The Sign of Osiris Risen.

6. Make the signs again as you repeat L.V.X.

L.V.X. Lux.

7. Arms folded on breast, head bowed.

The Light of the Cross.⁴

8. Then arms extended in Sign of Osiris Slain (see 1).

Virgo	Isis	Mighty Mother
Scorpio	Apophis	Destroyer
Sol	Osiris	Slain and Risen

9. Gradually raise arms.

Isis	Apophis	Osiris
------	---------	--------

10. Arms above head, face raised.

I. A. O.

11. Except when in the Vault, now vibrate the four Tablet of Union names to equilibrate the light.

Exarp	Hcoma	Nanta	Bitom

12. Aspire to the light and draw it down over your head to your feet.
Let the divine light descend.

The Uses of the Rose Cross Ritual

1. It encloses the aura with a protection against outside influences. It is like a veil. The pentagrams protect, but they also light up the astral and make entities aware of you. They are more positive for magical working. When much distracted, use the pentagrams to banish and the Rose Cross to maintain peace.

2. It is a call to another mode of your consciousness and withdraws you from the physical. It is a good preparation for meditation and, combined with the keyword, a form of invocation of the higher wisdom which is helpful when solving problems or preparing for a difficult interview, or in order to be calm and strong to help another.

3. When you are quite familiar with the ritual, but most certainly not before, it can be done in imagination while resting or lying down. Part of yourself goes out, and you get all the sensation of walking around your own quiescent body. Used thus, with rhythmic breathing, it will withdraw your mind from pain (if it be not too severe) and release you for sleep. You can do the analysis of the keyword standing behind your physical head, and you can call down the divine white brilliance, watching it flow over your body and smooth out the tangles in the etheric double, bringing peace and rest.

4. You can do the ritual with intention to help others in pain or difficulty. For this purpose, you build up an astral image of the person, in the centre of the room, and call down the light upon him, after surrounding him with the six crosses. When the ceremony is done, command the astral shape you have made to return to the person, bearing with it the peace of Yeheshuah.

5. It is a protection against psychic invasion from the thoughts of others or from disturbed psychic conditions, such as there might be in a place charged with fear, where terrible things had happened.

THE COMPLETE SYMBOL OF THE ROSE CROSS

This symbol ⁵ is to be worn suspended from a yellow collarette of silk, the motto of owner placed on the reverse side, with white sash, and is for general use in magical working, to be worn at all meetings of adepts.

It is to be made by each adept alone, and consecrated by himself and never touched by any other person, and wrapped in white silk or linen when not in use.

It is a complete synthesis of the masculine, positive or rainbow scale of colour attributions, which is also called “the scale of the king.”

The four ends of the cross belong to the four elements, and are coloured accordingly. The white portion belongs to the Holy Spirit and the planets.

The twenty-two petals of the rose refer to the twenty-two Paths. It is the cross in Tiphareth, the receptacle and the centre of the forces of the Sephiroth and the Paths.

The extreme centre of the rose is white, the reflected spiritual brightness of Kether, bearing upon it the red rose of five petals and the golden cross of six squares; four green rays issuant around the angles of the cross, from which the Second Order takes its name. They are the symbols of the receiving force.

Upon the white portion of the symbol, below the rose, is placed the hexagram, with the planets in the order which is the key of the Supreme Ritual of the Hexagram.

Around the pentagrams, which are placed one upon each elemental coloured arm, are drawn the symbols of the spirit and the four elements, in the order which is the key to the Supreme Ritual of the Pentagram. Upon each of the floriated ends of the cross are arranged the three alchemical principles, but in a different order for each element, and as showing their operation therein.

The upmost arm of the cross, allotted to air, is of the yellow colour of Tiphareth. In it the flowing philosophic mercurial nature is chief and without hindrance to its mobility—hence the ever moving nature of air. Its sulphureous side is drawn from the part of fire, whence its luminous and electrical qualities. Its saline side is from the water, whence result clouds and rain from the action of the solar forces.

The lowest arm of the cross, allotted to earth, is of the four colours of Malkuth, the earth being of the nature of a container and receiver of the other influences. The citrine answers to its airy part, the olive to the watery, the russet to the fire, and the black to the lowest part, earth. Here also is the mercurial part chief, but hindered by the compound nature whence its faculty becomes germinative rather than mobile, while the sulphur and the salt are respectively from the sides of water and fire, which almost neutralize their natural operation and bring about the fixedness and immobility of earth.

The extremity allotted to fire is of the scarlet colour of Geburah, and in it the sulphureous nature is chief, whence its powers of heat and burning. The salt is from the side of earth, whence the necessity for a constant substantial pabulum whereon to act, and the mercury is from the side of air, whence the leaping, lambent motion of flame especially when acted upon by wind.

The extremity allotted to water is of the blue colour of Chesed, and in it the saline side is chief as exemplified in the salt water of the ocean, to which all waters go, and from whence also is derived the nature of always preserving the horizontal line. The mercurial part is from earth, whence the weight and force of its flux and reflux. Its sulphuric part is from the air whence the effect of waves and storms. So that the disposition of these three principles forms the key of their alchemic operation in the elements.

The white rays issuing from behind the rose at the inner angles between the arms are the rays of the divine light issuing and coruscating from the reflected light of Kether in its centre; and the letters and symbols on them refer to the analysis of the keyword of an Adeptus Minor, I.N.R.I., by which the opening of the Vault is accomplished.

The twelve letters of the twelve petals follow the order of the signs of the zodiac. Uppermost is Heh, the letter of Aries, followed by Vau, Zayin, Cheth, Teth, Yod, while the letter of Libra, which is Lamed, is lowermost. Ascending are Nun, Samekh, Ayin, Tzaddi, Qoph.

The seven double letters of the middle row are allotted to the planets in the order of their exaltations, the planets being wanderers; the stars are fixed with respect to the Earth. These letters are Peh, Resh, Beth, with Daleth exactly over Libra, followed by Gimel, Kaph, Tau.

The three mother letters are allotted to the elements and are so arranged that the petal of air should be beneath the arm of the cross allotted to air, while those of fire and water are on counterchanged sides, so that the forces of the arms of the cross should not too much override the planetary and zodiacal forces in the rose, which might otherwise be the case were the petal of fire placed on the same side as the arm of fire and that of water on the side of water.⁶

The back of the cross bears inscriptions in Latin: “The Master Jesus Christ, God and Man,” between four Maltese Crosses which represent the four pyramids of the elements opened out. This is placed at the upmost part because therein is affirmed a descent of the divine force into Tiphareth, which is the central point between supernals and inferiors.

But at the lowest part is written the motto of the Zelator Adeptus Minor, because therein is the affirmation of the elevation of the human into the divine. But this is impossible without the assistance of the divine spirit from Kether, whence the space above Malkuth is white upon the front aspect of the cross, white being the symbol of the spiritual rescued from the material.

In the centre is written in Latin between the symbols of the alchemical principles, of which the outermost is sulphur, the purgatorial fire of suffering and self-sacrifice, “Blessed be the Lord our God who hath given us the symbol Signum.” And this is a word of six letters, thus representing the six creative periods in the universe.

The cross may be cut out of cardboard and the coloured portions may be painted or formed by pasting on portions of coloured papers of the required size and shape. The colours must be correct, clear, and brilliant. If they are not, the symbol is useless either as a symbol or insignium. If this occurs the whole should be destroyed, for faulty colours or shapes in divine symbols are a degradation of divine things and are practical blasphemy, because it is substituting the evil and disorderly for the good.

It is unfortunate that I have not been able to reproduce the symbol in its colours as painted by the Adeptus Minor.⁸ Black and white give no indication of the beauty and impressive quality which this symbol possesses. The reader should therefore make one for himself and colour it according to these directions.

The upper arm, above the rose, attributed to the element of air, is painted in bright yellow. Various lacquer enamels are now available, the use of which produces just the right kind of brilliance required for these magical symbols and flashing tablets. Over the yellow should be painted the symbols shown in its direct complement, pale mauve.

The right arm attributed to water is blue, and the symbols should be painted thereon in orange. It is difficult to describe the correct tone or depth of colour in these complementaries, but the student will know when he has hit upon the right hue for then the symbols will begin visibly to flash.

The left arm, the fire arm, is red, and the symbols appear on it in bright emerald green. Beneath the rose are two sections. The first is white, upon which a hexagram with planetary attributions is painted in black. Beneath this is the earth section, which should be painted in the four colours of Malkuth: citrine, olive, russet, and black. Superimposed on this, the pentagram and symbols will be painted in white.

The petals of the rose will be painted in the appropriate colours of the King scale, and the letters, on them, in the complementary colours, the cross within is gold, the barbs green, and the rose red.

Consecration of the Rose Cross

Consecration Ceremony

1. Arrange a central altar draped in black.
2. Place on it the triangle and cross as in the $0^\circ = 0^\square$ grade.
3. Place on it the rose, cup, salt and fire; but place cup between cross and triangle as in the $0^\circ = 0^\square$. Rose and incense east.
4. Place the new rose cross upon triangle.
- 5.⁹ Take up lotus wand in right hand, holding by black band.
6. Repeat: Hekas, hekas, este bebeloi!
7. Perform the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram.
8. Perform the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Hexagram.
9. Deposit wand upon the altar.
10. Purify the chamber with water in the four quarters, repeating the words:

So therefore first the priest who governeth the works of fire, shall sprinkle with the lustral water of the loud resounding sea.

11. Consecrate the chamber with fire in the four quarters, saying:

When after all the phantoms are vanished, thou shalt see that holy and formless fire, that fire which darts and flashes through the hidden depths of the universe, hear thou the voice of fire.

12. Take up thy wand by the white band.
13. Circumambulate with sun three times.
14. Return to place, and repeat adoration:

Holy art Thou, Lord of the Universe!

Holy art Thou whom nature hath not formed.

Holy art Thou, the vast and the mighty one,

Lord of the light and of the darkness.

Give sign of Neophyte at each adoration, and Sign of Harpocrates at close.

15. Perform the Supreme Invoking Ritual of the Pentagram at the four quarters, using the Angelic Tablet and divine names for each, with proper grade signs.

16. Stand west of altar, facing east. Hold lotus wand by white band.

17. Make over the rose cross, in the air, with lotus wand, and as if standing on centre of rose, the symbol of the circle and cross thus ⊕, and invoke all the divine and angelic names of Tiphareth by a special form:

O Thou most sublime majesty on high, who art at certain seasons worthily represented by the glorious sun of Tiphareth, I beseech Thee to bestow upon this symbol of the Rose and the Cross, which I have formed to Thy honour, and for the furtherance of the Great Work, in a spirit of purity and love, the most excellent virtues, by the divine name of YHVH, and the great name of YHVH Eloah Ve Daath. Deign I beseech Thee to grant that the great archangel Raphael, and the mighty angel Michael may strengthen this emblem, and through the sphere of the splendid orb of Shemesh may confer upon it such power and virtue, as to lead me by it towards the solution of the Great Secret.

(Alternative:)

O Thou most glorious light which lightenest every man who cometh into the world. Thou who art in due season shadowed forth by Tiphareth, the sun of beauty, I implore Thee to direct Thy light upon this symbol of the Rose and Cross which I have fashioned in Thine honour and for the furtherance of the Great Work. By the divine name YHVH, by Thy name of wisdom YHVH Eloah Ve Daath, permit I beseech Thee Thy shining archangel Raphael, and thy strong angel Michael, so to influence this emblem that it may be mighty for all good so that through the glorious sphere of Shemesh they may bestow upon it such power that in wearing it, I may at length lose and so find myself in that ineffable light which I most humbly seek.

Raise the hands and eyes to heaven during the prayer, and lower them as you finish it.

18. Repeat these words from Genesis:

And a river, Nahar, went forth out of Eden to water the garden, and from thence it was parted and came into four heads.

19. Describe over the white portion the invoking hexagrams of the planets, as if standing upon it, repeating the necessary names, holding the wand by the white part.

20. Describe equilibrating pentagrams of spirit with words as laid down.

Eheieh with Exarp, Bitom.

Hcoma, Nanta, with Agla.

21. Then over the four coloured arms in turn describe the invoking pentagrams of each element, using words and grade signs, and repeating the verse of Genesis 2:13, 14, and 15, referring to each, holding the wand by the part allotted to the Kerubic sign of the element.

22. Over the red fire arm read:

And the name of the first river is Pison, it is that which compasseth the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold. And the gold of that land is good. There is bdellium and the onyx stone.

Make invoking fire pentagram, holding wand by Leo—lemon yellow band, make sign of Philosophus, and vibrate Elohim, Oip Teaa Pedoce.

23. Over blue water arm, read:

And the name of the second river is Gihon, the same as that which compasseth the whole land of Ethiopia.

Make invoking water pentagram, holding wand by blue-green Scorpio band, and make Sign of Practicus, and say: El, Empeh Arsel Gaiol.

24. Over yellow air arm, read:

And the name of the third river is Hiddekel, that is it which goeth forth to the east of Assyria.

Make invoking air pentagram, holding wand by violet Aquarius band, make Sign of Theoricus, and say: Yhvh, Oro Ibah Aozpi.

25. Over dark earthy arm read:

And the fourth river is Euphrates.

Make invoking earth pentagram, and hold wand by red-orange Taurus band. Make sign of Zelator, saying: Adonai, Emor Dial Hectega.

26. Lastly, holding wand again by white part, describe a circle from left to right over the outermost twelve petals of rose, and pronounce the name Adonai, vibrating it as taught.

27. Describe similar circle over seven middle petals pronouncing the word Ararita.

28. Describe circle over three innermost petals, saying: YHVH.

29. Finally, trace a perpendicular line from top to bottom and say: Eheieh.

30. Trace a horizontal from left to right and say: Elohim.

31. Wrap up Rose Cross in white silk or linen.

32. Close the ceremony by purification by water and consecration by fire.

33. Reverse circumambulation three times.

34. Stand at west of altar, face east, and say:

In the name of Yeheshuah, I now set free any spirits that may have been imprisoned by this ceremony.

35. Perform the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram.

THE MAGIC SWORD

Magic Sword

It is to be used in all cases where great force and strength are to be used and are required, but principally for banishing and for defence against evil forces. For this reason it is under the presidency of Geburah and of Mars, whose names and forces are to be invoked at its consecration, which should take place in the day and hour of Mars, or else during the course of the fiery tattwa.¹⁰

Any convenient sword may be adapted to this use, but the handle, hilt, and guard must be such as to offer surfaces for inscriptions. It should be of medium length and weight. The motto of the Adeptus should be engraved upon it, or painted upon the hilt in letters of emerald green, in addition to the mystic devices and names. The hilt, pommel, and guard are to be coloured a flame red. The blade should be clean and bright. Pentagrams should be painted on salient portions, because this is the lineal figure of Geburah. The divine and angelic names related to Geburah are then to be added in emerald, and also their sigils taken from the rose.¹¹ The sword must then be consecrated in due form.

Here again let the Zelator Adeptus Minor remember his obligation never to use his knowledge of practical magic for purposes of evil, and let him be well assured that if he do this, notwithstanding his pledge, the evil he endeavours to bring about will react on himself. He will experience in his own person and affairs that very thing which he has endeavoured to bring about for another. So also may he perish and be blotted out from among us.

To obtain real force implanted in any magical weapon, by consecration, the adept requires to be healthy, pure, strong in mind, free from anxiety, and apart from disturbances. He requires also to have mastered the details of the ceremony and to be familiar with the proper pentagrams and other symbols.

Consecration Ritual of the Sword

Prepare chamber with central altar draped in black, red cross and white triangle, rose and incense, cup and water, lamp, plate, and salt. White robe, sash, consecrated Rose Cross and lotus wand, new sword, red cloak, and lamen. An invocation to Mars and Geburah. An astrological figure to show position of Mars at the time. In wording and formulating the invocation to the Forces of Geburah, force and strength are to be specially requested.

- 1. Place the sword upon altar, hilt to east near incense, point to west near water.*
- 2. Take up lotus wand by black part.*
- 3. Stand at west of altar, facing east.*

4. Say: Hekas hekas este bebeloi.

5. Take up cup and purify with eater sprinkling to east, south, west, and north.

6. Saying:

And first the priest who governeth the works of fire must sprinkle with the lustral water of the loud resounding sea.

7. Put down cup on altar.

8. Take up incense and wave it as you pass round east, south, west, and north.

9. Saying:

And when after all the phantoms are vanished thou shalt see that holy and formless fire, that fire which darts and flashes through the hidden depths of the universe, hear thou the voice of fire.

10. *Put down incense. Take up wand.*¹²

11. Circumambulate with sun three times, grasping wand by white band. Return to west, face east.

12. Say adoration:

Holy art Thou, Lord of the Universe.

Holy art Thou whom nature hath not formed.

Holy art Thou, the vast and mighty one,

Lord of the light and of the darkness.

13. Perform Lesser Invoking Ritual of the Hexagram of Mars, holding wand by white band. Give 5° = 6□ signs and analyse keyword.

14. Return to west of altar.

15. Turn to face the direction in which you have found Mars to be—standing so that the altar is between yourself and Mars for convenience.

16. Describe in the air the invoking pentagram of the sign Mars is in.

17. Describe invoking hexagram of Mars, saying: Elohim Gibor.

18. Then, still holding wand by white band, recite your invocation to the power of Geburah and the forces of Mars, tracing the sigil of each name as you read it.

O mighty power who governeth Geburah, Thou strong and terrible divine Elohim Gibor, I beseech Thee to bestow upon this magic sword power and might to slay the evil and weakness I may encounter. In the fiery sphere of Madim, may it be welded and tempered to unswerving strength and fidelity. May Thy great archangel Kamael bestow upon me courage wherewith to use it aright and may the powerful angels of the order of Seraphim scorch with their flames the feebleness of purpose which would hinder my search for the true light.

19. Then trace in the air, slowly, above sword, and as if standing upon it, the invoking hexagram of Mars. Do this with the lotus end, still holding the white band.

20. Next trace over the sword the letters of the names in the invocation and their several sigils.

21. Put down wand.

22. Take up cup and purify new sword with water, making cross upon it; put down cup.

23. Take up incense and wave it over new sword.

24. Take up new sword and with it perform the Lesser Invoking Ritual of the Hexagram and also trace the invoking hexagram of Mars, repeating Ararita and Elohim Gibor.

25. Lay down sword.

26. With cup purify chamber as before.

27. With incense purify as before.

28. Reverse circumambulation three times and say:

29. In the name of Yeheshuah, I now set free all spirits that may have been imprisoned by this ceremony.

30. Perform with the sword the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Hexagram.
31. Perform Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram.
32. Conclude with Qabalistic cross.
33. Wrap up sword, in white or scarlet silk or linen. Henceforth no one else may touch it.

THE FOUR ELEMENTAL WEAPONS

These are the tarot symbols of the letters of the divine name YHVH, and of the elements, and have a certain bond and sympathy between them. So that even if only one is to be used the others should be also present, even as each of the four elemental tablets is divided in itself unto four lesser angles representing the other three elements bound together therewith in the same tablet. Therefore also let the Z.A.M. remember that when he works with these forces he is, as it were, dealing with the forces of the letters of the divine name.

Each implement must be consecrated, and when this has been done, no one else must touch it.

Four Elemental Weapons

The Wand for Fire

The staff of the wand should be of wood, rounded and smooth and perforated from end to end. Within it should be placed a magnetised steel rod, just so long as to project 1/16 inch beyond each end of the wood. It is often convenient to form the wand of cane which has a natural hollow through it. If of cane, there should be three natural lengths according to the knots, so that these knots may be placed similarly to the manner in the figure which is such as a turner would produce.

Eighteen inches is an extreme length.¹³ The magnet should be a strong one. One end of the wood should be cone-shaped. The north end of the magnet, known by its repelling the so-called north pole of a compass needle, should be placed at the end of the wand which is plain.

The whole is coloured flame scarlet and is divided into three parts by yellow bands. The cone-shaped end has also painted upon its red surface three wavy flame-shaped Yods as ornaments; they are painted bright yellow.

The divine and angelic names of the element of fire should then be written in bright green paint along the shaft and on the cone. Their sigils should be added and the motto of the Adeptus.

The wand must then be consecrated. It is for all workings of the nature of fire and under the presidency of Yod and of the “Wand of the Tarot.”

The Cup for Water

Any convenient glass cup may be adapted for this use. The bowl should be somewhat the shape of a crocus flower, and must show eight petals. A smooth glass cup is preferable unless it have eight cuts or ridges. These eight petals must be coloured bright blue, neither too pale nor too dark. They must be edged with bright orange colour. The colours must be clear and correct. The petals may be formed by paint or by coloured paper pasted on the glass.

The proper divine and angelic names are then to be written upon the petals in orange colour together with their sigils from the rose; then add the motto of the Adeptus. The cup must then be consecrated. It is to be used in all workings of the nature of water, and under the presidency of the letter Heh, and the “Cup of the Tarot.”

The Dagger for Air

Any convenient dagger or knife or sword may be adapted to the use; the shorter it is, the better. The hilt and pommel and guard are to be coloured in bright pure yellow. The divine and angelic names should be written upon the yellow background in purple or violet, together with their sigils from the rose, and the motto of the Adeptus.

It is to be used in all work of an airy nature, and under the presidency of Vau, and the “Sword of the Tarot.”

Let there be no confusion between the magical sword and the air dagger. The magical sword is under Geburah and is for strength and defence. The air dagger is for air, for Vau of YHVH, and is to be used with the three other elemental implements. They belong to different planes and any substitution of one for the other is harmful.

The Pentacle for Earth

The pentacle or pentacle should be formed of a round disc of wood, about 4½ inches in diameter, and from ½ inch to 1 inch in thickness; nicely polished, and truly circular, and of even thickness.

There should be a circular white border and a white hexagram on each face of the disc. The space within the white border should be divided into four compartments by two diameters at right angles. These four compartments are to be coloured: the upper, citrine; right, olive-green; left, russet-brown; lowest, black.

The divine and angelic names should be written in black round the white border; each name followed by its sigil taken from the rose. The motto of the Adeptus to be added.

The pentacle should be the same on both sides, and should be held in the hand with the citrine uppermost; unless there is any special reason for using one of the other compartments. And in this matter remember that citrine is the airy part of earth; russet the fiery; olive the watery; black the earthy part of earth.

The pentacle must then be consecrated.

It is then to be used in all work of the nature of earth, and is under the presidency of Heh final, and of the “Pentacle of the Tarot.”

Ritual of Consecration of the Four Elemental Weapons

Provide altar, lamp, cup, salt, incense and rose, white triangle, and red cross; four new implements, fire wand, air dagger, water cup, and earth pentacle; magical sword, Rose Cross, lotus wand, white sash.

Drape and arrange altar as in $0^\circ = 0^\square$ repast. Put on white robe, sash, and Rose Cross. Light the lamp, put water in the cup, kindle the incense.

Select time for the ceremony during the course of the appropriate tattwas.¹⁴

1. Take up the lotus wand by the black portion, and say: Hekas hekas este bebeloi. Put down the wand and take up the magic sword.

2. Perform the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram. Pass to the east to begin. Use magic sword.

3. Lay down sword, and purify with water, saying:

So therefore first the priest who governeth the works of fire must sprinkle with the lustral water of the loud-resounding sea.

4. Consecrate with fire, saying:

And when, after all the phantoms are vanished, thou shalt see that holy formless fire, that fire which darts and flashes through the hidden depths of the universe, hear thou the voice of fire.”

5. Take up the lotus wand by white portion.

6. Circumambulate with the sun three times.

7. Repeat the adoration, salute with the $0^\circ = 0^\square$ sign each time.

Holy art thou, Lord of the Universe.

Holy art Thou whom nature hath not formed.

Holy art Thou, the vast and the mighty one,

Lord of the light and of the darkness.

8. Varying with each implement on different days, or twenty minutes between each commencement, according to tattwas,¹⁵ perform the Supreme Invoking Ritual of the Pentagram of the particular elemental implement with lotus wand, holding it by appropriate band of Kerubic figure.

9. With the lotus wand in thy hand, and standing by the altar and facing the quarter of the element whose implement you are consecrating, describe in the air over the implement, as if standing upon it, the invoking pentagram of that implement.

10. Invoke the divine and angelic names already graven upon the implement, making their letters and sigils in the air over the implement with the lotus:

O Thou, who art from everlasting, Thou who hast created all things, and doth clothe Thyself with the forces of nature as with a garment, by Thy holy and divine name strong defence and a powerful weapon wherewith to rule and direct the spirits of the elements.

13. Still with the sword, trace in the air over the implement the hexagram of Saturn, and read the invocation to the six seniors.

Ye mighty princes of the (name direction) quadrangle, I invoke you who are known to me by the honourable title, and position of rank, of seniors. Hear my petition, oh ye mighty princes, the six seniors of the (same point) quarter of the earth who bear the names of:

and be this day present with me. Bestow upon this (name weapon) the strength and purity whereof ye are masters in the elemental forces which ye control; that its outward and material form may remain a true symbol of the inward and spiritual force.

*14. Then read the invocations of the angels governing the four lesser angles. During each, make the invoking pentagram of the element whose implement is being consecrated: cup, wand, dagger, or pentacle, according to which lesser angle is in process, making the pentagram in the air immediately over the implement with the sword.*¹⁷

Fire Wand

Lesser angle of fire: “O Thou mighty angel Bziza who art ruler and president over the four angels of the fiery lesser quadrangle of fire, I invoke thee to impress into this weapon the force and fiery energy of thy kingdom and servants, that by it I may control them for all just and righteous purposes.”

With the sword, trace invoking fire pentagram with lion Kerub.

Lesser angle of water: “O Thou mighty angel Banaa, ruler and president over the four angels of fluid fire, I beseech thee to impress into this weapon thy magic power that by it I may control the spirits who serve thee for all just and righteous purposes.”

With the cup, trace invoking fire pentagram.

Lesser angle of air: “O Thou mighty angel Bdopa, ruler and president over the four angels and governors of the subtle and aspiring etheric fire, I beseech thee to bestow upon this weapon thy strength and fiery steadfastness, that with it I may control the spirits of thy realm for all just and righteous purposes.”

Trace invoking fire pentagram with the dagger.

Lesser angle of earth: “O Thou mighty angel Bpsac, who art ruler and president over the four angels of the denser fire of earth, I beseech thee to bestow upon this weapon thy strength and fiery steadfastness that with it I may control the spirits of thy realm for all just and righteous purposes.”

Trace invoking fire pentagram with pentacle.

Water Cup

Lesser angle of fire: “O thou powerful angel Hnlrx, thou who art lord and ruler over the fiery waters, I beseech thee to endue this cup with the magic powers of which thou art lord, that I may with its aid direct the spirits who serve thee in purity and singleness of aim.”

With wand trace invoking water pentagram with eagle Kerub.

Lesser angle of water: “O thou powerful angel Htdim, thou who art lord and ruler over the pure and fluid element of water, I beseech thee to endue this cup with the magic powers of which thou art lord, that I may with its aid direct the spirits who serve thee in purity and singleness of aim.”

With sword trace invoking water pentagram.

Lesser angle of air: “O thou powerful angel Htaad, thou who art lord and ruler of the etheric and airy qualities of water, I beseech thee to endue this cup with the magic powers of which thou art lord, that I may with its aid direct the spirits who serve thee in purity and singleness of aim.”

With dagger trace invoking water pentagram.

Lesser angle of earth: “O thou powerful angel Hmagl, thou who art lord and ruler of the more dense and solid qualities of water, I beseech thee to endue this cup with the magic powers of which thou art lord, that I may with its aid direct the spirits who serve thee in purity and singleness of aim.”

With pentacle trace invoking water pentagram.

Air Dagger

Lesser angle of fire: “O thou resplendent angel Exgsd, thou who governest the fiery realms of air, I conjure thee to confer upon this dagger thy mysterious and magical powers, that I thereby may control the spirits who serve thee for such purposes as be pure and upright.”

With the wand trace invoking air pentagram with Aquarius as Kerubic emblem.

Lesser angle of water: “O thou resplendent angel Eytpa, thou who governest the realms of fluid air, I conjure thee to confer upon this dagger thy mysterious powers, that by its aid I may control the spirits who serve thee for such purposes as be pure and upright.”

With the cup trace invoking air pentagram.

Lesser angle of air: “O thou resplendent angel Erzla, thou who rulest the realms of pure and permeating air, I conjure thee to confer upon this dagger the magic power of which thou art master, whereby I may control the spirits who serve thee, for such purposes as be pure and upright.”

With the sword trace invoking air pentagram.

Lesser angle of earth: “O thou resplendent angel Etnbr, thou who rulest the denser realms of air symbolized by the lesser angle of earth, I conjure thee to confer upon this dagger the magic powers of which thou art master, whereby I may control the spirits who serve thee, for such purposes as be pure and upright.”

With the pentacle trace invoking air pentagram.

Earth Pentacle

Lesser angle of fire: “O thou glorious angel Naaom, thou who governest the fiery essences of earth, I invoke thee to bestow upon this pentacle the magic powers of which thou art sovereign, that by its help I may govern the spirits of whom thou art lord, in all seriousness and steadfastness.”

With wand over russet part, trace invoking earth pentagram with Taurus Kerub.

Lesser angle of water: “O thou glorious angel Nphra, thou who governest the moist and fluid essences of earth, I invoke thee to bestow upon this pentacle the magic powers of which thou art sovereign that by its help I may govern the spirits of whom thou art lord, in all seriousness and steadfastness.”

With cup over olive part, trace invoking earth pentagram.

Lesser angle of air: “O thou glorious angel Nboza, thou who governest the airy and delicate essence of earth, I invoke thee to bestow upon this pentacle the magic powers of which thou art master, that with its help I may govern the spirits of whom thou art lord, in all seriousness and steadfastness.”

With dagger over citrine part, trace invoking earth pentagram.

Lesser angle of earth: “O thou glorious angel Nroam, thou who governest the dense and solid earth, I invoke thee to bestow upon this pentacle the magic powers of which thou art master, that with its help I may govern the spirits of whom thou art lord, in all seriousness and steadfastness.”

With sword over black part, trace invoking earth pentagram.

15. Then take up the newly consecrated implement and perform with it the Supreme Invoking Ritual of the Pentagram of its element in the four quarters, preceding each pentagram with the equilibrating pentagram suitable, and reciting the divine name. Close with Qabalistic cross and prayer. When completed each implement is to be wrapped in silk or linen, white, or suitable colour.

16. Purify with water, repeating verse as in opening.

17. Consecrate with fire, repeating the verse as in opening.

18. Reverse circumambulation.

19. Stand at west of altar, and say: In the name of Yeheshuah, I now set free any spirits that may have been imprisoned by this ceremony.

20. Perform the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram in the four quarters.

21. If preferred, the Supreme Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram of special element, if one or two or three implements have been consecrated and not all four at same ceremony.

13. Note by Regardie: That of the present writer is about ten inches long.

14. Note by Regardie: The angelic names used in these rituals are names from the Angelic or Enochian Tablets. This whole subject is elucidated in the final section of this volume.

15. Note by JMG: The tattwas are covered in Book Seven on pages 576–656.

16. Note by JMG: For the pronunciations of these Enochian names and those in the invocations of the angles, see page 365.

17. Note by Regardie: When tracing the pentagrams over the implement to be consecrated, remember that the same pentagram is traced but each time with another of the weapons. In the consecration of the cup, the water pentagram is the only one used, but it is traced using the sword and the other implements. This is mentioned so that, for example, the student will not use different pentagrams traced with different weapons when consecrating one implement.

BOOK FIVE

Inner Order Teachings on the Neophyte Grade

Z.1: THE ENTERER OF THE THRESHOLD

The General Exordium

The speech in the silence:

The words against the son of night:

The voice of Thoth before the universe in the presence of the eternal gods:

The formulas of knowledge:

The wisdom of breath:

The radix of vibration:

The shaking of the invisible:

The rolling asunder of the darkness:

The becoming visible of matter:

The piercing of the coils of the stooping dragon:

The breaking forth of the light:

All these are in the knowledge of Tho-oth.

The Particular Exordium

At the ending of the night: At the limits of the light: Tho-oth stood before the unborn ones of time!

Then was formulated the universe:

Then came forth the gods thereof:

The aeons of the bornless beyond:

Then was the voice vibrated:

Then was the name declared.

At the threshold of the entrance,

Between the universe and the infinite,

In the sign of the enterer, stood Tho-oth,

As before him were the aeons proclaimed.

In breath did he vibrate them:

In symbols did he record them:

For betwixt the light and the darkness did he stand.

The complete explanation of the symbolism of, and the formulae contained in, the $0^\circ = 0^\square$ grade of Neophyte of the Order of the Golden Dawn.

“Enterer of the Threshold” is the name of the $0^\circ = 0^\square$ grade of Neophyte. “The Hall of the Neophytes” is called “The Hall of the Dual Manifestation of Truth,” that is of the goddess Thmaah, whose name has three forms according to the nature of her operation. This is explained under the chapter concerning the Hegemon.

Of the Temple in Reference to the Sephiroth

The temple, as arranged in the Neophyte grade of the Order of the Golden Dawn in the Outer, is placed looking towards the YH of YHVH in Malkuth in Assiah. That is, as Y and H answer unto the Sephiroth Chokmah and Binah in the Tree (and unto Abba and Aima, through whose knowledge alone that of Kether may be obtained), even so, the sacred rites of the temple may gradually, and as it were, in spite of himself, lead the Neophyte unto the knowledge of his higher self. Like the other Sephiroth, Malkuth hath also its subsidiary Sephiroth and Paths. Of these ten Sephiroth, the temple as arranged in the Neophyte grade, includeth only the four lower Sephiroth in the Tree of Life, viz.: Malkuth, Yesod, Hod, and Netzach, and the outer side of Paroketh, the Veil. Paroketh formeth the east of the temple. First in importance cometh the symbolism of the east.

The three chiefs who govern and rule all things, the viceroys in the temple of the unknown Second Order beyond, are the reflections therein of the powers of Chesed, Geburah, and Tiphareth. They represent: the Emperor—Geburah and the grade $6^\circ = 5^\square$; the Praemonstrator—Chesed and the grade $7^\circ = 4^\square$; the Cancellarius—Tiphareth and the grade $5^\circ = 6^\square$.

Now the Emperor governeth, because in Netzach, which is the highest grade of the First Order, $4^\circ = 7^\square$, is the fire reflected from Geburah. The Praemonstrator is second, because in Hod, which is the next highest grade, $3^\circ = 8^\square$, is the water reflected from Chesed. The third is the Cancellarius, because in Yesod, $2^\circ = 9^\square$, is the air reflected from Tiphareth. Thus the Order is governed by a triad, one in intention but having different functions: the Imperator to command: the Praemonstrator to instruct: the Cancellarius to record.

The proper mantle of office of the Imperator is the flame scarlet robe of fire and severity, as on him do the energy and stability of the temple depend: and if he has sub-officers to assist him, they partake of his symbolism. His mantle is the symbol of unflinching authority, compelling the obedience of the temple to all commands issued by the Second Order; and upon the left breast thereof, is the cross and triangle of the Golden Dawn, both white, representing the purification of the temple in the Outer Order by fire. He may wear a lamen similar to that of Hierophant, of the same colours, but depending from a scarlet collar, and he may bear a sword similar to that of Hiereus. His place in the temple is at the extreme right of the dais and at the equinox he takes the throne of Hierophant when that office is vacated.

The proper mantle of office of the Praemonstrator is the bright blue robe of water, representing the reflection of the wisdom and knowledge of Chesed. His duty is that of teacher and instructor of the temple, always limited by his obligation to keep secret the knowledge of the Second Order from the Outer Order. He superintends the working of the Outer Order, seeing that in it nothing be relaxed or profaned; and duly issues to the temple any instruction regarding the ritual received by him from the greatly honoured chiefs of the Second Order. He is therefore to the temple the reflector of the wisdom beyond. His sub-officers partake of his symbolism. The white cross and triangle on his left breast on the robe represents the purification of the Outer Order by water. He may wear a lamen like that of Hierophant, but blue upon an orange field and depending from a collar of blue. He may bear a sceptre surmounted by a Maltese Cross in the elemental colours.

The proper mantle of office of the Cancellarius is the yellow robe of air. Upon him depend the records of the temple, the order of its working, the arrangements of its meetings and the circulation of its manuscripts. He is the recorder and, more immediately than either of the preceding chiefs, the representative of the executive authority of the Second Order over the Outer. His duty is to see that in no case knowledge of a grade be given to a member who has not properly attained to it. He is the immediate circulator of all communications from the Second Order. His sub-officers partake of his symbolism. His white cross and triangle represent the purification of the Outer Order by air. He may wear a lamén like that of Hierophant, but of yellow on a purple field, and depending from a purple collar; and he may bear a sceptre surmounted by a hexagram of amber and gold.

The sceptres of the chiefs should be of the same colour as their mantles, with a gold band to represent Tiphareth, being the first grade of the Inner Order. The sword of the Emperor should have a plain scarlet hilt, with gold or brass mountings, while the sceptre of the Praemonstrator should be blue with a gold band. The proper seat of the chiefs is beside the Hierophant, and if desired the Emperor and Cancellarius may be seated to the right and Praemonstrator and immediate past Hierophant to his left—the Cancellarius and immediate past Hierophant being nearest to the Hierophant on their respective sides. The chiefs stand before the Veil in the east of the temple, as the representatives of the Inner Order, and therefore no meeting can be held without one of them. Preferably all three chiefs should be present. The other officers of the temple exist only by their authority and permission.

Because the east of the temple is the outer side of Paroketh, all members of the Second Order wear the crossed sashes of a lord of the Paths of the Portal of the Vault only—no higher grade being allowed to be shown in a temple of the First Order. Members of the Second Order should be seated in the east of the temple when practicable. Any past Hierophant may wear a mantle of a Hierophant and a jewel of that lamén, but not a large collar lamén. Immediate past Hierophant may have a sceptre of a Hierophant.

The chiefs, or members asked to represent them on the dais, wear white gowns. The cords and tassels of all mantles of chiefs or officers should be white to symbolize spiritual purity and influence of the divine and shining light. Members of the Outer Order wear a black gown or tunic with a sash indicating their grade across it. The black sash crosses from the left shoulder (from the side of the black pillar, as they first received it), and the white sash from the right shoulder.

Egyptian headdresses, or nemysses, are worn by the chiefs and officers, those of the chiefs being of the colour of their mantles striped with the complementary colour; those of the officers being striped equally black and white. Members may wear similar nemysses in black and white or plain black squares of approved pattern.

The key to the formation of the tunic and nemyss is the crux ansata for the nemyss makes the oval, and the arms and body of the tunic, the cross.

The Symbolism of the Temple

The bases of the two pillars are respectively in Netzach and Hod; the white pillar being in Netzach and the black pillar in Hod. They represent the two pillars of mercy and severity. The bases are cubical and black to represent the earth element in Malkuth. The columns are respectively black and white to represent the manifestation of the eternal balance of the scales of justice. Upon them should be represented in counterchanged colour any appropriate Egyptian designs, emblematic of the soul.¹

The scarlet tetrahedral capitals represent the fire of test and trial, and between the pillars is the porchway of the region immeasurable. The twin lights which burn on their summits are “the Declarers of the Eternal Truth.” The bases of the tetrahedra being triangular, that on the white pillar points east, while that on the black points west. They thus complete the hexagram of Tiphareth—though separate, as is fitting in “the Hall of the Dual Manifestation of Truth.”

The altar, whose form is that of a double cube, is placed in the eastern part of Malkuth, as far as the Neophyte is concerned. But to the Adeptus Minor, its blackness will veil on the east citrine, on the south olive, on the north russet, while the west side alone, and the base, will be black, while the summit is of a brilliant whiteness.

The symbols upon the altar represent the forces and manifestation of the divine light, concentrated in the white triangle of the three supernals as the synthesis; wherefore, upon this sacred and sublime symbol, is the obligation of the Neophyte taken as calling therein to witness the forces of the divine light.

The red cross of Tiphareth (to which the grade of $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$ is referred) is here placed above the white triangle, not as dominating it, but as bringing it down and manifesting it unto the Outer Order; as though the crucified one, having raised the symbol of self-sacrifice, had thus touched and brought into action in matter the divine triad of light.

Around the cross are the symbols of the four letters of the name Jehovah—the Shin of Yeheshuah being only implied and not expressed in the Outer Order. At the east is the mystical rose, allied by its scent to the element of air. At the south is the red lamp, allied by its flame with the element of fire. At the west is the cup of wine, allied by its fluid form to the element of water. At the north are bread and salt, allied by their substance to the element of earth.

The elements are placed upon the altar according to the winds.²

“For Osiris on-Nophris who is found perfect before the gods, hath said:

‘These are the elements of my body,

Perfected through suffering, glorified through trial.

For the scent of the dying rose is as the repressed sigh of my suffering:

And the flame-red fire as the energy of mine undaunted will:

And the cup of wine is the pouring out of the blood of my heart:

Sacrificed unto regeneration, unto the newer life:

And the bread and salt are as the foundations of my body,

Which I destroy in order that they may be renewed.

For I am Osiris triumphant, even Osiris on-Nophris, the Justified:

I am he who is clothed with the body of flesh,

Yet in whom is the spirit of the great gods:
I am the lord of life, triumphant over death.
He who partaketh with me shall arise with me:
I am the manifestor in matter of those whose abode is the invisible:
I am purified: I stand upon the universe:
I am its reconciler with the eternal gods:
I am the perfecter of matter:
And without me, the universe is not.’”

Technically, the door is supposed to be situated behind the seat of Hiereus in the west; but it may be in any part of the hall, seeing that the walls represent the barrier to the exterior. “The gate of the declarers of judgment” is its name—and its symbolic form is that of a straight and narrow doorway between two mighty pylons. “The watcher against the evil ones” is the name of the Sentinel who guards it and his form is the symbolic one of Anubis.

The Stations of the Officers

Hierophant

The Hierophant is placed in the east of the temple, on the outer side of the Veil Paroketh, to rule the temple under the presidency of the chiefs. There he fills the place of a lord of the paths of the Portal of the Vault of the Adepti, acting as inductor to the sacred mysteries. The insignia and symbols of Hierophant are:

The throne of the east in the path of Samekh, outside the Veil.

The mantle of bright flame scarlet, bearing a white cross on the left breast.

The lamén suspended from a white collar.

The crown-headed sceptre.

The banner of the east.

The position of the throne on the path Samekh is fitting for the inductor to the mysteries, as there being placed in that balanced and central position of that path by which alone is safe entrance to the mystical knowledge of the light in Tiphareth. Being placed before Paroketh at the point of its rending, it there marks the shining forth of the light through the Veil; and that translation of the three supernals to the Outer Order, which is represented by the red Calvary Cross and the white triangle upon the altar. Thus the station of Hierophant's throne fitly represents the rising of the sun of life and light upon our Order.

The robe of scarlet ³ represents the flaming energy of the divine light, shining forth into infinite worlds. Upon the left breast is a white cross to represent purification unto the light, and this cross may be one of the following forms:

Calvary Cross

Calvary: in which case it alludes either to the cross of six squares of Tiphareth, or to the cross of the rivers.

Pyramidal Cross

Pyramidal: the cross of the elements, to represent the descent of the divine and angelic forces into the pyramid symbol.

Equilateral Cross

Equilateral: a cross of the elements, symbolizing their purification through the light of the four-lettered name YHVH in Tiphareth.

Maltese Cross

Maltese: the cross of four arrowheads, representing the keen and swift impact of the light, coming from behind the Veil, through the elements symbolized by the arrow of Sagittarius in the Path of Samekh.

It is indifferent which of the crosses be employed, seeing that each represents the operation of the light through the Veil.

The sceptre represents the forces of the Middle Pillar. It is scarlet with gold bands to represent the places of the Sephiroth—Daath, Tiphareth, and Yesod—the pommel being Malkuth. The shaft represents the Paths of Gimel, Samekh, and Tau. The grip by which it is wielded is the path Tau, representing the universe governed by and attracting the forces of the light. The names of Sephiroth and Paths are not marked thereon, but the Hierophant initiate of the Second Order should remember the sublimity of the symbolism while he wields it. It represents him as touching thereby the divine light of Kether and attracting it through the Middle Pillar to Malkuth. It is called “the Sceptre of Power” and invests him with the power of declaring the temple open or closed in any grade, if time be short, and this is done by saying: “By the power in me vested by this sceptre, I declare this temple duly opened (or closed).”

This method of opening and closing “by sceptre” should only be used in great emergency where time presses. It should not be used in a ceremony in which elemental spirits have been invoked—especially not in the closing.

The lamén is partially explained in the Portal ceremony thus: “The Hierophant’s lamén is a synthesis of Tiphareth, to which the Calvary Cross of six squares, forming the cube opened out, is fitly referred. The two colours, red and green, the most active and the most passive, whose conjunction points out the practical application of the knowledge of equilibrium, are symbolic of the reconciliation of the celestial essences of fire and water. For the reconciling yellow unites with blue in green, which is the complementary colour to red, and with red in orange which is the complementary colour to blue. The small inner circle placed upon the cross alludes to the rose that is conjoined therewith in the symbolism of the rose and cross of our order.” But in addition to this, it represents the blazing light of the fire of the sun bringing into being the green vegetation of the otherwise barren earth, and also the power of self-sacrifice requisite in one who would essay to initiate into the sacred mysteries. So as the sceptre represents the authority and power of the light, the lamén affirms the qualifications necessary to him who wields it, and therefore is it suspended from a white collar, to represent the purity of the white brilliance from Kether. Hence it should always be worn by the Hierophant.

The Banner of the East is also partially explained in the Portal: “The field of the Banner of the East is white, the colour of light and purity. As in the previous case, the Calvary Cross of six squares is the number six of Tiphareth, the yellow cross of solar gold, and the cubical stone, bearing in its centre the sacred Tau of life, and having bound together upon it the form of the macrocosmic hexagram, the red triangle of fire and the blue triangle of water—the Ruach Elohim and the waters of creation.”

In addition to this explanation, it affirms the mode of action employed by the divine light in its operation by the forces of nature. Upon it is the symbol of the macrocosm so coloured as to affirm the action of the fire of the spirit through the waters of creation under the harmony of the golden cross of the Reconciler. Within the centre of the hexagram is a Tau cross in white, to represent its action as a triad; and the whole is placed on a white field representing the ocean of the Ain Soph Aour. The banner is suspended from a gold coloured bar by red cords, and the pole and base should be white. The base represents the purity of the foundation—the shaft, the purified will directed to the Higher. The golden crossbar is that whereon the manifested law of perfection rests; the banner itself, the perfect law of the universe, the red cords and tassels the divine self-renunciation, whose trials and sufferings form, as it were, the ornament of the completed work. The whole represents the ascent of the initiate into perfect knowledge of the light—therefore in the address of the Hiereus the Neophyte hears “Even the Banner of the East sinks in adoration before Him,” as though that symbol, great and potent though it be, were yet but an inferior presentment of the Higher, fitted to our comprehension.

“Expounder of the Sacred Mysteries” is the name of the Hierophant, and he is Osiris (Aeshoorist) in the nether world. (The letter -st added as a suffix to a name indicates the influence from Kether.)⁴

Hiereus

The station of Hiereus is at the extreme west of the temple and in the lowest point of Malkuth where he is enthroned in its darkest part, in the quarter represented black in the Minutum Mundum diagram.⁵ Representing a terrible and avenging god at the confines of matter, at the borders of the Qlippoth, he is enthroned upon matter and robed in darkness, and about his feet are thunder and lightning—the impact of the paths of Shin and Qoph—fire and water, terminating respectively in the russet and olive quarters of Malkuth. There, therefore, is he placed as a mighty and avenging guardian to the sacred mysteries. The symbols and insignia of Hiereus are:

The sword of strength and severity.

The lamen suspended from a scarlet collar.

The Banner of the West.

The position of the throne of the west at the limits of Malkuth is fitting for the avenger of the gods, for he is placed there in eternal affirmation against the evil ones—“Hitherto shall ye come and no further.” The throne is also placed there as a seat of witness and of punishment decreed against evil.

The robe or mantle is of darkness, threatening and terrible to the outer, as concealing an avenging force ever ready to break forth against the evil ones. On the left breast is a white cross to represent the purification of matter unto the light. The sword represents the forces of the pillar of severity as a whole, but the places of the Sephiroth are not necessarily indicated thereon. The guard is Hod and may be of brass; the grip is the path of Shin and may be of scarlet, and the pommel, Malkuth, may be black. The grip by which it is wielded, being the path Shin, represents the universe governed by the flaming force of severity, and represents the Hiereus as wielding the forces of divine severity. “The Sword of Vengeance” is its name.

The lamén is partially explained in the Portal thus: “The outer circle includes the four Sephiroth—Tiphareth, Netzach, Hod, and Yesod—of which the first three mark the angles of the triangle inscribed within, while the connecting paths Nun, Ayin, and Peh form its sides. In the extreme centre is the Path of Samekh through which is the passage for the rending of the Veil. It is therefore a fitting lamén for Hiereus as representing the connecting link between the First and Second Orders, while the white triangle established in the surrounding darkness is circumscribed in its turn by the circle of light.” In addition to this explanation, the lamén represents “the light that shineth in darkness though the darkness comprehendeth it not.” It affirms the possibility of the redemption from evil and even that of evil itself, through self-sacrifice. It is suspended from a scarlet collar as representing its dependence on the force of divine severity overawing the evil. It is a symbol of tremendous strength and fortitude, and is a synthesis of the office of Hiereus as regards the temple, as opposed to his office as regards the outer world. For these reasons it should always be worn by Hiereus.

The Banner of the West completes the symbols of Hiereus. It is thus explained in the Zelator grade: “The white triangle refers to the three paths connecting Malkuth with the other Sephiroth, while the red cross is the hidden knowledge of the divine nature which is to be obtained through their aid. The cross and triangle together represent life and light.” In addition to this explanation from the Zelator grade, it represents eternally the possibility of rescuing the evil; but in it the Tiphareth Cross is placed within the white triangle of the supernals as thereby representing that sacrifice as made only unto the Higher. The red cross may be bordered with gold in this instance, to represent the perfect metal obtained in and through the darkness of putrefaction. Black is its field which thus represents the darkness and ignorance of the outer, while the white triangle is again the light which shineth in the darkness but which is not comprehended thereby. Therefore is the Banner of the West the symbol of twilight—as it were, the equation of light and darkness. The pole and the base are black, to represent that even in the depths of evil can that symbol stand. The cord is black, but the transverse bar and the lance-point may be golden or brass and the tassels scarlet as in the case of the Banner of the East, and for the same reasons.

The Banner of the West, when it changes its position in the temple, represents that which bars and threatens, and demands fresh sacrifice ere the path leading to the Higher be attained.

“Avenger of the Gods” is the name of Hiereus, and he is “Horus in the abode of blindness unto, and ignorance of, the Higher.” Hoor is his name.

Hegemon

The station of Hegemon is between the two pillars whose bases are in Netzach and Hod, at the intersection of the Paths of Peh and Samekh, in the symbolic gateway of occult science—as it were, at the beam of the balance, at the equilibrium of the scales of justice; at the point of intersection of the lowest reciprocal path with that of Samekh, which forms a part of the Middle Pillar. She is placed there as the guardian of the threshold of entrance and the preparer of the way for the enterer—therefore the reconciler between light and darkness, and the mediator between the stations of Hierophant and Hiereus. The symbols and insignia of Hegemon are:

The mitre-headed sceptre.

The lamen suspended from a black collar.

The robe represents the spiritual purity which is required in the aspirant to the mysteries and without which qualification none can pass between the eternal pillars. It represents the divine light which is attracted thereby and brought to the aid of the candidate. It symbolizes the self-sacrifice that is offered for another to aid him in the attainment of the light. It also signifies the atonement of error, the preparer of the pathway unto the divine. Upon the left breast is a cross, usually the Calvary form, of red to represent the energy of the lower will, purified and subjected to that which is higher—and thus is the office of Hegemon especially that of the reconciler.

The mitre-headed sceptre is the distinctive ensign of office of Hegemon. On the Tree of Life it represents the forces of the Pillar of Mercy. It should be of scarlet with gold bands and pommel. The bands represent the places of the Sephiroth Chesed and Netzach—the shaft being formed by the paths Vau and Kaph, the grip by which it is wielded being the path Qoph, while the pommel is Malkuth. The mitre is gold with red mountings and each point terminates in a ball. The mitre is charged with a red Calvary Cross of six squares. This mitre represents the wisdom of Chokmah as a duplicated aspect of Kether, attracted by the symbol of self-sacrifice. The sceptre is wielded by the forces of flux and reflux, shown by the grip being referred to the path Qoph, and it represents the attraction into the universe of the forces of divine mercy. The Sephiroth and paths are marked only as bands, and owing to its meaning, the sceptre should be carried by Hegemon in all conducting of the candidate, as representing to the latter the attraction of the forces of his higher self. It is called “the Sceptre of Wisdom.”

The lamén is explained in part in the grade of Philosophus thus: “The peculiar emblem of the Hegemon is the Calvary Cross of six squares within a circle. This cross embraces Tiphareth, Netzach, Hod, and Yesod, and rests upon Malkuth. Also the Calvary Cross of six squares forms the cube and is thus referred to the six Sephiroth of Microprosopus which are Chesed, Geburah, Tiphareth, Netzach, Hod, and Yesod.”

In addition to this explanation, it represents the black Calvary Cross of suffering as the initiator by trial and self-abnegation, and the opener of the way into the comprehension of the forces of the divine light. It is therefore suspended from a black collar to show that suffering is the purgation of evil.

“Before the Face of the Gods in the Place of the Threshold” is the name of Hegemon, and she is the goddess Thma-Ae-St ⁶ having the following Coptic forms:

Thma-Ae-St—This as regards the Middle Pillar and the influence from Kether.

Thma-aesh—This more fiery as regards her influence with respect to the pillar of severity.

Thmaa-ett—This more fluidic with regard to her influence with respect to the pillar of mercy.

She is the wielder of the sceptre of dual wisdom from Chokmah and therefore is the mitre head split in two and not closed, to indicate the dual manifestation of wisdom and truth: even as the Hall of the Neophytes is called “the Hall of the Dual Manifestation of the Goddess of Truth.”

The Minor Officers

The three inferior officers do not wear mantles, but only lamens suspended from black collars. The designs are in white on a black field to show that they are administrators of the forces of light acting through the darkness, under the presidency of the superior officers.

The lamen of Kerux is thus explained in the grade of Theoricus: “The Tree of Life and the three mother letters are the keys wherewith to unlock the caduceus of Hermes. The upper point of the wand rests on Kether and the wings stretch out to Chokmah and Binah, thus comprehending the three supernal Sephiroth. The lower seven are embraced by the serpents whose heads fall on Chesed and Geburah. They are the twin serpents of Egypt and the currents of astral light. Furthermore, the wings and the top of the wand form the letter Shin, the symbol of fire; the heads and upper halves of the serpents form Aleph, the symbol of air; while their tails enclose Mem, the symbol of water—the fire of life above, the waters of creation below, and the air symbol vibrating between them.”

In addition to this, the caduceus of Kerux represents the balanced forces of eternal light working invisibly in the darkness—even as the light borne before the hoodwinked candidate at his initiation is symbolic of the light which guides him in the darkness of the world though he sees it not nor knows it. This caduceus is the rod of Hermes, containing invisible and unsuspected forces, the rules of whose administration may be revealed through meditation. It is the outer form of the wand surmounted by the winged globe below which the twin serpents are shown—the wand of the Chief Adept in the 5° = 6th grade.

The lamén of Stolistes is thus explained in the grade of Practicus: “The cup of Stolistes partakes in part of the symbolism of the laver of Moses and the sea of Solomon. On the Tree of Life it embraces nine of the Sephiroth exclusive of Kether. Yesod and Malkuth form the triangle below, the former the apex, the latter the base. Like the caduceus, it further represents the three elements of water, air, and fire. The crescent is the water which is above the firmament; the circle is the firmament, and the triangle is the consuming fire below, which is opposed to the celestial fire symbolized by the upper part of the caduceus.”

In addition to this explanation, the cup represents the receptacle and collector of the more fluidic forces of the light, and is the symbol of an inexhaustible bowl of libation from which reservoir the adept may draw the reserved forces of the light—which matter again calls for meditation.

The lamén of Dadouchos is thus explained in the grade of Zelator: “The hermetic cross, which is also known as fylfot, hammer of Thor, and swastika, is formed of seventeen squares taken from a square of twenty-five lesser squares. These seventeen fitly represent the sun, the four elements, and the twelve signs of the zodiac.”

In addition to this, the lamén has a more extended meaning. The hermetic cross, the bolt of whirling flame, which is represented by the cross of four axes whose heads may be either double or single and turned in either direction, is a symbol of terrific strength and represents the fire of the spirit, cleaving its way in all directions through the darkness of matter. Therefore is it borne on the lamén of Dadouchos whose office is that of purification and consecration by fire, and from it also may be drawn by meditation several formulae of strength.

The Kerux is the principal form of Anubis, as the Sentinel is the subsidiary form.

Kerux is Ano-Oobist Empe-Eeb-Te—"Anubis of the East."

Sentinel is Ano-Oobi Em-Pemen-Te—"Anubis of the West."

The Kerux is the herald, the guardian and watcher within the temple—as Sentinel is the watcher without—and therefore is his charge the proper disposition of the furniture and stations of the temple. He is also the proclaimer. His peculiar ensigns of office are:

The red lamp to signify the hidden fire over which he watches.

The magic staff of power to represent a ray of the divine light which kindles the hidden fire.

Two potions whereby to produce the effect of blood.

He is the guardian of the inner side of the portal—the sleepless watcher of the gods and the preparer of the pathway to divine wisdom. "Watcher for the Gods" is the name of Kerux, and he is Ano-Oobist, the herald before them.

The Stolistes is stationed in the northern part of the hall to the northwest of the black pillar whose base is in Hod, and is there as the affirmer of the powers of moisture, water, reflected through the Tree into Hod. The cup is the receptacle of this, filled from Hod so as to transmit its forces into Malkuth, restoring and purifying the vital forces therein by cold and moisture. "Goddess of the Scale of the Balance at the Black Pillar" is the name of Stolistes and she is "the Light Shining through the Waters upon Earth," Aura-Mo-Ooth, and there is a connection between her and the Aurim or Urim of the Hebrews.

The Dadouchos is stationed towards the midst of the southern part of the hall, to the southwest of the white pillar whose base is in Netzach, and is there as the affirmer of the powers of fire, reflected down the Tree to Netzach. The censer is the receptacle thereof—the transmitter of the fires of Netzach to Malkuth, restoring and purifying the vital force therein by heat and dryness. “Goddess of the Scale of the Balance at the White Pillar” is the name of Dadouchos and she is “Perfection through Fire manifesting on Earth,” Thaum-Aesch-Nia-eth, and there is a connection between her and the Thummim of the Hebrews.

The Stolistes has the care of the robes and insignia of the temple as symbolizing by their cleansing and purification the purging away of the evil of Malkuth by the waters of the spirit.

The Dadouchos has charge of all lights, fires, and incense, as representing the purifying and purging of Malkuth by fire and the light of the spirit. These officers also purify the temple, the members, and the candidate by water and by fire, as it is written: “I indeed baptize you with water, but One shall come after me who shall baptize ye with the Holy Ghost and with fire.”⁷

This completes the names and titles of the officers of a temple and they are seven in number and may all be taken by a frater or soror. As they represent powers and not persons, the feminine form of the Greek names is not usually used, for the powers are positive (male) or negative (female) according to the godform used. Thus Hierophant, Hiereus, and Kerux are more natural offices for fratres, while Hegemon, Stolistes, and Dadouchos are more natural for sorores—but the office itself carries no implication of sex and sometimes the psychic balance of a ceremony may be better maintained when a frater is Hegemon and a soror Hierophant.

The Hierophant must be of the 5° = 6[□] grade and a Zelator Adeptus Minor. The Hiereus must be at least Philosophus, and the Hegemon at least Practicus, and preferably Philosophus. Kerux must be at least Theoricus while Stolistes and Dadouchos must be Zelator—a Neophyte being qualified only for Sentinel. In case the feminine forms of the names of the officers should wish to be known, they are as follows:

V.H. Hierophant or V.H. Hierophantia

H. Hiereus or H. Hiereia

H. Hegemon or H. Hegemon

Kerux or Kerukaina

Stolistes or Stolistria

Dadouchos or Dadouche

Sentinel or Phulax

Of the Three Chiefs

The three chiefs are in the temple and rule it, yet they are not comprehended in, nor understood by, the Outer Order. They represent, as it were, veiled divinities sending a form to sit before the Veil Paroketh, and, like the Veils of Isis and Nephthys, impenetrable save to the initiate. The synthesis of the three chiefs may be said to be in the form of Tho-oth who cometh from behind the Veil at the point of its rending. Yet separately, they may be thus referred:

The Imperator, from his relation to Geburah, may be referred to the goddess Nephthys,

The Praemonstrator, from his relation to Chesed, may be referred to the goddess Isis,

The Cancellarius, from his property of Recorder, may be referred to the god Thoth.

No ceremony of the Outer Order may take place without a chief—preferably the three chiefs or their vicegerents present—and on account of the stations on the dais, it is well to have these stations filled by an adept, should a chief be absent. These stations and those of the officers are called the visible stations of the gods, and descriptions of the forms which an adept officer builds up as a focus of force are given in another paper.

The Invisible Stations

These are:

1. The Stations of the Kerubim.
2. The Stations of the Children of Horus.

3. The Stations of the Evil One.
4. The Station of Harpocrates.
5. The Stations of Isis, Nephthys, Aroueris.

1. The Kerubim. The stations of the man, the lion, the bull, and the eagle are at the four cardinal points without the hall, as invisible guardians of the limits of the temple. They are placed according to the winds—beyond the stations of Hierophant, Dadouchos, Hiereus, and Stolistes—and in this order do their symbols appear in all warrants of temples.

The Kerub of Air formulates behind the throne of Hierophant. She has a young girl's countenance and form, with large and shadowing wings; and she is a power of the great goddess Hathor who unites the powers of Isis and Nephthys. To the sign Aquarius is she referred as a correlative, which represents springs of water breaking upon earth; though as a zodiacal sign it is referred to air, the container of rain. The Egyptian name of the sign Aquarius is Phritithi.⁸

The Kerub of Fire has the face and form of a lion with large and clashing wings. He formulates behind the throne of Dadouchos, and he is a power of the great goddess Tharpesh or Tharpheshest, the latter syllable being nearly Pasht. The action of the lion Kerub is through the flaming fire of Leo of which the Egyptian name is Labo-Ae.

The Kerub of Water has the face and form of a great eagle with large and glistening wings and he formulates behind the throne of Hiereus. He is a power of the great god Thoomoo, and his operation is by the sign of Scorpio, which is called in Egyptian Szlae-Ee.⁹

The Kerub of Earth has the face and form of a bull with heavy and darkening wings. He formulates behind the throne of Stolistes and he is a power of the great god Ahaphshi and his operation is by the sign Taurus, called Ta-Aur in Egyptian.

2. The Children of Horus. Between the invisible stations of the Kerubim are those of the four vicegerents of the elements and they are situated at the four corners of the temple, at the places marked by the four rivers of Eden in the warrant; for the body of a warrant, authorizing the formation and establishment of a temple, represents the temple itself—of which the guardians are the Kerubim and the vicegerents in the places of the rivers.

Golden Dawn Temple Warrant

Ameshet, man-headed, is placed in the northeast, between the man and the bull. Ameshet or Amesheth. (The spelling is Coptic and differs according to the force intended to be invoked by the letters.)

Tou-mathaph, jackal-headed, is placed in the southeast between the man and the lion. Toumathph or Tmoumathv.

Ahephi, ape-faced, is placed in the southwest between the lion and the eagle. Ahephi or Ahaphix.

Kabexnuv, hawk-faced, is placed in the northwest, between the eagle and the bull. Kabexnuv or Dabexnjemouv.

3. The Station of the Evil One. This station is in the place of Yesod and is called the station of the Evil One, the slayer of Osiris. He is the tempter, accuser, and punisher of the brethren and in Egypt is represented mostly with the head of a water-dragon, the body of a lion or leopard, and the hind-parts of a water-horse.¹⁰ He is the administrator of the power of the evil triad:

The stooping dragon—Apophrassz.

The slayer of Osiris—Szathan Toophon.

The brutal power of demonic force—Bessz.

The synthesis of this evil triad, “The Mouth of the Power of Destruction,” is called Ommoo-Szathan.

4. The Station of Harpocrates. The invisible station of Harpocrates is in the Path of Samekh, between the station of Hegemon and the invisible station of the evil triad. Harpocrates is the god of silence and mystery, whose name is the word of this grade of Neophyte. He is the younger brother of Horus, Hoor-Po-Krattist.

5. The Stations of Isis and Nephthys. The stations of Isis and Nephthys are respectively at the places of the pillars in Netzach and Hod, and these great goddesses are not otherwise shown in the grade, save in connection with the Praemonstrator and Imperator, as operating through the Hierophant, seeing that Isis corresponds to the Pillar of Mercy and Nephthys to that of severity; and therefore the positions of the pillars or obelisks are but, as it were, the places of their feet.

6. The Station of Aroueris. The invisible station of Aroueris (Horus the Elder) is beside the Hierophant as though representing the power of Osiris to the Outer Order—for while the Hierophant is an adeptus, he is shown only as lord of the Paths of the Portal—so that, when the Hierophant moves from the throne of the east, he is no longer Osiris but Aroueris. Yet when the Hierophant is on the dais the station of Aroueris is that of the immediate past Hierophant who sits on the Hierophant’s left. Aroo-ouerist.

This ends the constitutory symbolism of a temple in the $0^\circ = 0^\square$ grade of Neophyte. Should a member have occasion to quit his place, he shall do it moving with the course of the sun; and as he passes the place of Hierophant, he shall salute with the sign. And when he enters or quits the temple, he shall salute the Hierophant's throne when within the portal.

1. Note by JMG: Compare "The Pillars," which specifies particular diagrams from the Book of the Dead for the two pillars.
2. Note by JMG: That is, according to the elemental order used in the pentagram rituals: air to east, fire to south, water to west, and earth to north.
3. Note by JMG: The special garments of the three principal officers are described as mantles, robes, and cloaks at different points in this paper. There seems to have been some difference in practice among the different temples of the original Order.
4. Note by JMG: See "The Coptic Names of the Chiefs and Officers".
5. Note by JMG: See color insert page 5.
6. Note by JMG: That is, Maat, the goddess of justice.
7. Note by JMG: This is a free rendering of Matthew 3:11 and Luke 3:16.
8. Note in original document: Thou shalt not confound the Kerubim with their signs of the zodiac, notwithstanding that the latter be under the presidency of the former, seeing that the Kerub representeth a far more sublime potency, yet acting by a harmonious sympathy through the particular sign allotted unto their correspondence.
9. Note by Regardie: In Egyptological works the name of this god is Tum or Tmu.
10. Note by JMG: That is, a hippopotamus. The "water-dragon" in question, in classic Egyptian depictions, is usually a crocodile.

THE SYMBOLISM OF THE OPENING OF THE 0° = 0[□] GRADE OF NEOPHYTE

The opening ceremony begins with the cry of the “watcher within” who should come to the right front of Hierophant and raise his wand. This symbol of the ray of the divine light from the white triangle of the three supernals thus descends into the darkness and warns the evil and uninitiated to retire, so that the white triangle may be formulated upon the altar through the combined effect of the formulae of the opening ceremony.

Having done this, he sees that the entrance is properly guarded. And then the Hierophant calls to the Hiereus to test the members by the signs, the knowledge of which shows that they, though in the land of blindness and ignorance, have yet seen that triangle of divine light from the three supernals formulated in darkness. It is then noted that the names of the three chief officers begin with the letter of breath, the Coptic Ⲗ. In the name of Osiris the zinfon is mute, and silent, and concealed, as it were, by H the Eta. In the name Horus, it is manifest and violently aspirated, while in the name Thmaest, it is partly one and partly the other, for it is compounded with the letter T in Ⲑ.

(H “Ae” is attributed to Chesed, zinfon to Aries, and Ⲑ to Earth and Saturn. This is intended to affirm the unknown life, which is inspired from the beyond, sent out to Aries, the commencement of the spring of the year, the life which after being inspired, is breathed forth again; and also the possible use of that breath, between the inspiration and the expiration, in the combination between it and the forces of the microcosm.)

The whole is a rehearsal of the properties of the reflection of the element air down through the Middle Pillar of the Sephiroth, representing the reflection of the air from Kether, through Tiphareth to Yesod, and even to the citrine part of Malkuth. For the subtle aether is, in Kether, inspired from the divine light beyond; thence reflected into Tiphareth, wherein it is combined with the reflexes from the alchemical principles in that great receptacle of the forces of the Tree. In Yesod, it affirms the foundation of a formula and from Malkuth it is breathed forth or reflected back.

And this formula the adept can use. Standing in his sphere of sensation he can, by his knowledge of the sacred rites, raise himself unto the contemplation of Yechidah and from thence aspire (in the sense of adspire, i.e., to attract towards you in breathing ¹¹) downwards into himself the lower genius as though temporarily to inhabit himself as its temple.

Another formula of vibration is here hidden. Let the adept, standing upright, his arms stretched out in the form of a Calvary Cross, vibrate a divine name, bringing with the formulation thereof a deep inspiration into his lungs. Let him retain the breath, mentally pronouncing the name in his heart, so as to combine it with the forces he desires to awake thereby; thence sending it downwards through his body past Yesod, but not resting there, but taking his physical life for a material basis, send it on into his feet. There he shall again momentarily formulate the name—then, bringing it rushing upwards into the lungs, thence shall he breathe it forth strongly, while vibrating that divine name. He will send his breath steadily forward into the universe so as to awake the corresponding forces of the name in the outer world. Standing with arms out in the form of a cross, when the breath has been imaginatively sent to the feet and back, bring the arms forward in the Sign of the Enterer while vibrating the name out into the universe. On completing this, make the Sign of Silence and remain still, contemplating the force you have invoked.

This is the secret traditional mode of pronouncing the divine names by vibration, but let the adept beware that he applies it only to the divine names of the gods. If he does this thing ignorantly in working with elemental or demonic names, he may bring into himself terrible forces of evil and obsession. The method described is called “the vibratory formula of the Middle Pillar.”

After noting the names of the three chief officers, comes the recapitulation of the stations and duties of the officers, thus occultly affirming the establishment of the temple so that the divine light may shine into the darkness. Then follows the purification and consecration of the hall by water and by fire, thus marking the limitation of the four cardinal points at the four quarters and the equation of the elements. This is the baptism of the place and, as it were, the preparation of a fitting shrine for the forces of the divine light. While all this goes forward, especially after the Hierophant's "for by names and images are all powers awakened and reawakened," the officers become clothed in their godforms and the invisible stations awake.

The procession of officers is then formed in the north in readiness for the "mystic circumambulation in the path of light" (that is to say, none of the partakers is hoodwinked). It is formed in the north, beginning from the station of Stolistes, the symbol of the waters of creation attracting the divine spirit, and therefore alluding to the creation of the world by the spirit and the waters. The mystic reverse circumambulation forms its procession in the south, beginning from the station of Dadouchos, as symbolic of the ending and judgment of the world by fire. But also, the mystic circumambulation commences by the Paths of Shin and Resh, as though bringing into action the solar fire; while the reverse circumambulation commences beside those of Qoph and Tzaddi as though bringing the watery reflux into action.

The order of the mystic circumambulation. First comes Anubis, the watcher within; next Thmaest, the goddess of the Hall of Truth; then Horus; then the goddesses of the scales of the balance; then members, if the hall be large enough; and at the end the watcher without, the Sentinel. It is as though a gigantic wheel were revolving, as it is said: "One wheel upon earth beside the Kerub."¹² The name of the sphere of the primum mobile, Rashith ha-Gilgalim, signifies the heads or beginnings of whirling motions or revolutions. Of this wheel in the mystic circumambulation, the ascending side begins from below the pillar of Nephthys, and the descending side from below the pillar of Isis; but in the reverse circumambulation, the contrary.

Now the nave or axis of this wheel is about the invisible station of Harpocrates—as though that god, in the Sign of Silence, were there placed affirming the concealment of that central atom of the wheel, which alone revolves not.

The mystic circumambulation is called symbolic of the rise of light and from it is drawn another formula for the circulation of the breath. It is the formula of the four revolutions of the breath (not, of course, of the actual air inspired, but of the subtle aethers which may be drawn thence and of which it is the vehicle—the aethers which awaken centres in the subtle body through the formula). This formula should be preceded by that of the Middle Pillar, described previously. By this method, having invoked the power you wish to awaken in yourself, and contemplated it, begin its circumambulation thus: Fill the lungs and imagine the name vibrating in the contained air. Imagine this vibration going down the left leg to the sole of the left foot—thence passing over to the sole of the right foot—up the right leg to the lungs again, whence it is out-breathed. Do this four times to the rhythm of the four-fold breath.¹³

The object of the mystic circumambulation is to attract and make the connection between the divine light above and the temple. Therefore the Hierophant does not quit his post to take part therein, but remains there to attract by his sceptre the light from beyond the Veil. Each member in passing gives the Sign of the Enterer, thus projecting the light forward on his path from east to west, as he receives it from the Hierophant's throne. Horus passes only once, for he is the son of Osiris and inherits the light by birthright from him. Therefore he goes at once to his station to fix the light there. Thmaest, the goddess of truth, passes twice because her rule is of the balance of the two scales, and she retires to her station between the pillars there to complete the reflex of the middle column. The watcher within and the rest circumambulate thrice as affirming the completion of the reflection of the perfecting of the white triangle of the three supernals upon the altar.

Then follows the adoration of God, the vast one, the Lord of the Universe—at which again all give the Sign of the Enterer, the sign of the projection of the force of the light. Then only does the watcher declare that the sun has arisen and that the light shineth in darkness. Now comes the battery of the $0^\circ = 0^\square$ grade—the single knock of Hierophant repeated by Hiereus and Hegemon. This affirms the establishment of the white triangle and therefore the completion of the opening ceremony. The mystic words “Khabs am pekht” which accompany the knocks seal the image of the light. Their significance implies, by various Qabalistic methods of analysis, as well as by a certain reading of the Coptic and Egyptian hieroglyphics, “light in extension” or “May light be extended in abundance upon you.” Konx Om Pax is the Greek corrupted pronunciation of this, put here to link it with its right origin.

The grade of Neophyte has 0 or the circle for its number, as if hiding all things under the negative symbol. This is placed within a circle and a square connected by equal lines, as if affirming the hidden quality of their origin in Kether where all things are one, and the consequent universal application of the secret formulae.

Editorial Note by John Michael Greer

The Coptic language, which is still used as a liturgical language by Christians in Egypt, is descended from ancient Egyptian but written in a script largely based on ancient Greek. None of the founders and adepts of the Golden Dawn were fluent in it, or even as familiar with it as they were with Hebrew; their Coptic lore was based on the limited resources available to them, and seems to have been modified further based on an alphabetic symbolism unique to the Golden Dawn. The Coptic names given here and in the Golden Dawn manuscripts that Regardie used thus do not correspond to standard Coptic usage. I have nonetheless left the names unchanged, except for typographical corrections in the English transliterations, because the spellings had specific symbolic meanings within the Golden Dawn tradition. The following table, derived from the Golden Dawn flying rolls, may be of help to students of the tradition who wish to explore these names and their meanings.

Note: the letter Ⲥ, Soo, is not pronounced in Coptic, and is used only as a symbol for the number 6; the Golden Dawn assignment of the sound value “St” to this letter is unique to the order. Several other letters have different sounds in ordinary Coptic than those used by the order.

11. Note by JMG: The word “aspire” comes from the Latin ad-spiro, “to breathe to or towards.”
 12. Note by JMG: Ezekiel 1:15.
 13. Note by Regardie: In this connection read very carefully the section on page 743–778 concerning the four serpent formulae of the four aces of the tarot. Some hint may be there gleaned of the relation of the breath to the macrocosmic forces.
 14. Note by JMG: Misspelled “Tto-oumathfph or Tmo-oumathv” in the original. Compare the Coptic, in which the second letter is the Coptic letter ⲟ, O, pronounced “oo.”
 15. Note by JMG: The second version is misspelled “Dabexnjemouv” in the original. Compare the Coptic, where the first letter is K.
 16. Note by JMG: Given as “Power of the Mouth of the Power of Destruction” in the original text at this point; this less repetitive form, however, is given in the lecture on the invisible stations (page 431), and appears to be correct.

THE EGYPTIAN GODFORMS OF THE NEOPHYTE GRADE

The stations of the godforms used in our symbolism come under two heads:

1. Visible Stations.
2. Invisible Stations.

The visible stations are the places of the officers, each of whom has a special astral shape suitable to the forces he represents.

On the dais are places for the three chiefs, the past Hierophant, and the Hierophant. The order in which they sit (as you face east) is:

Imperator	Cancellarius	Hierophant	Past Hiero	Praemonstrator
Nephthys	Thoth	Osiris	Aroueris	Isis

The names below are those of the godforms they represent. The following are the descriptions of the godforms of the seven officers of the Neophyte grade.

Osiris

Hierophant: Osiris in the netherland. Expounder of the mysteries in the Hall of the Dual Manifestation of the Goddess of Truth.

Hierophant is represented by two godforms, the passive and active aspects of Osiris. Seated on the dais as Hierophant, he is clothed in the godform of Osiris. He wears the tall white crown of the south flanked by feathers striped white and blue. His face is green, the eyes blue, and from his chin hangs the royal beard of authority and judgment, blue in colour and gold tipped. He wears a collar in bands of red, blue, yellow, and black—and on his back is a bundle strapped across his chest by scarlet bands. He is in mummy wrappings to the feet, but his hands are free to hold a golden phoenix wand, a blue crook, and a red scourge. The hands are green. His feet rest on a pavement of black and white.

The godform of Osiris never moves from the dais. When the Hierophant has to move from the dais, he is covered by the form of Osiris in action—Aroueris, which is built up by the past Hierophant, seated on Hierophant's left. If no one is seated as past Hierophant, then inner members help the Hierophant to formulate the second godform.

Aroueris, Horus the Elder, is very lively to look upon—like pure flames. He wears the double crown of Egypt, the cone shaped crown in red inside the white crown of the north, with a white plume. His nemyss is purple banded with gold at the edges. His face and body are translucent scarlet. He has green eyes and wears a purple beard of authority. He wears a yellow tunic with a waist cloth of yellow striped with purple, from which depends a lion's tail. In common with all Egyptian gods, he has a white linen kilt showing like an apron under the coloured waist cloth. His armlets and anklets are of gold. He carries in his right hand a blue phoenix wand, and in his left a blue ankh. He stands on a pavement of purple and gold.

Horus

Hiereus: Horus in the abode of blindness unto and ignorance of the higher. Avenger of the gods.

He wears the double crown of the south and north, red and white, over a nemyss of scarlet banded with emerald green. His face is that of a lively hawk—tawny and black with bright piercing eyes, his throat is white. His body, like that of Aroueris, is entirely scarlet. He wears collar, armlets, and anklets of emerald; a waist cloth of emerald striped red from which depends a lion's tail; and he carries in his right hand an emerald phoenix wand and in his left a blue ankh. He stands on a pavement of emerald and scarlet.

Thmaa-Est

Hegemon: Thmaa-Est. “Before the face of the gods in the place of the threshold.”

Thmaa-Est wears a black nemyss bound at the brow with a purple band from which rises, in front, a tall ostrich feather of green striped with red in equal bands. She wears a banded collar of red, yellow, blue, and black. Her tunic is emerald green reaching to the feet where it is banded to match the collar. She has purple and green shoulder straps and a purple girdle also bordered in the colours mentioned above. Her face and body are natural colour—i.e., a light Egyptian red-brown. She wears armlets of emerald and red, and she carries a combined form of lotus and phoenix wand. It has an orange flower, a blue stem, and ends in an orange sign of the binary. In her left hand she carries a blue ankh, and she stands on a pavement of yellow and purple, bordered with blocks of red, blue, yellow, black, in succession.

Anubis of the East

Kerux: Anubis of the east. Watcher of the gods.

Anubis has the head of a black jackal, very alert, pointed ears well pricked up. His nemyss is purple banded with white; he wears a collar of yellow and purple bands and a tunic of yellow flecked with tufts of black hair. His body is red. His waist cloth is yellow striped with purple and from it hangs a lion's tail. His ornaments are purple and gold; his phoenix wand and ankh, blue. He stands on a pavement of purple and yellow.

Auramo-ooth

Stolistes: Auramo-ooth. “The light shining through the waters upon earth.”

Auramo-ooth is mainly in blue. Her face and body are natural. She wears a blue crown of the north from which springs a delicate gold plume, over a vulture headdress of orange and blue. Her collar is orange and blue, she carries a blue ankh and a lotus wand, having an orange lotus on a green stem. Her plain blue tunic reaches to the feet. She stands on black.

Thaum-Aesch-Niaeth

Dadouchos: Thaum-Aesch-Niaeth. “Perfection through fire manifesting on earth.” “Goddess of the scales of the balance at the white pillar.”

Thaum-aesch is mainly in red. Her face and body are natural. She wears a red crown of the south, flanked by two feathers in green barred black, over a vulture headdress in red and green. Her collar is red and green and she carries a green ankh and a lotus wand with a red flower and a green stem. Her simple red tunic reaches to the feet and she stands on black.

Anubis of the West

Sentinel: Anubis of the west.

His form is the same as that of Kerux but his nemyss, ornaments, and dress are black and white. He has a lion's tail and carries a black phoenix wand and ankh. He stands on black.¹⁷

The Three Chiefs

Nephthys

Imperator: Nephthys.

Nephthys has a face and body of translucent gold. She is crowned with a cap over a vulture headdress of black and white, the vulture head being red. Her collar and ornaments are black and white, and she wears a black robe to the feet. It is bordered in black and white. She carries a blue ankh and a lotus wand with a green flower and a blue stem. She stands on black and white pavement.

Isis

Praemonstrator: Isis.

Isis has a face and body of translucent gold. She is crowned with a throne over a vulture headdress of blue and orange. The vulture head is red. Her robe is of blue bordered with gold. Her ornaments are blue and orange, and she carries a blue ankh and a lotus wand with a green flower and a blue stem. She stands on blue and orange.

Thoth

Cancellarius: Tho-oth.

The godform of Thoth is built up by the Cancellarius or the officer seated on the right of Hierophant. This is his visible station, but during the Neophyte grade, he also has an invisible station in the east while the obligation takes place.

He has an Ibis head, black beak, and white throat. His nemyss is yellow bordered with mauve. His collar is yellow with a middle band of squares in mauve and green. His tunic is mauve with yellow stripes, and he has a lion's tail. His limbs are natural colour, his ornaments are red and green. He carries a blue ankh, and a stylus and writing tablet. He stands on mauve and yellow.

The Invisible Stations

These fall naturally into four groups given below in order of their importance.

1. Stations in the Path of Samekh in the Middle Pillar: Hathor—Harparkrat—Evil Persona.
2. Kerubim.
3. Children of Horus.

4. The Forty-Two Assessors.

Hathor

1. Hathor:

This great goddess formulates behind Hierophant in the east. Her face and limbs are of translucent gold. She wears a scarlet sun disc, resting between black horns from the back of which rise two feathers in white, barred blue. She has a black nemyss; a collar of blue, red, blue; and blue bands which support her robe of orange, bordered with blue and red. Her ornaments are blue and orange. She carries a blue ankh and a lotus wand with a green flower and a blue stem. She stands on black bordered with blue.

Harparkrat

Harparkrat:

He formulates in the centre of the hall between Hegemon and the altar, where he sits or stands on a lotus, facing east. His face and body are translucent emerald green. He has blue eyes, and a curl of blue hair, denoting youth, comes round his face on the right side. He wears the double crown, red and white. His collar is yellow and blue; his waist cloth is yellow and blue with a mauve girdle, whence depends a lion's tail. His lotus has leaves alternately blue and yellow, and rests on a pavement of mauve and orange. He has no insignia. His left forefinger is on his lips.

Omoo-Szathan, Typhon, Apophis, Set:

The evil persona is a composite figure of the powers arising from the Qliploth. It rises from the base of the altar standing east of the altar facing west, in the sign of Typhon. He is black, and has an animal, somewhat lizardlike head, a black body, and tail, and he stands on black. His nemyss is of olive green decorated with russet, his collar of russet and citrine. He has a white apron and a waist cloth of dull red striped with russet. He has no ornaments.

2. The Kerubim:

The Kerub of Air is formed behind Hathor, and she is a power of Hathor and has the same general colouring. She has a young girl's countenance and behind her are spread large and shadowing wings.

The Kerub of Fire is in the south beyond the seat of Dadouchos. It is a power of the great goddess Tharpesh, and has the face and form of a lion with large and clashing wings. The colouring is very lively and flashing Leo green with ruby and flame-blue and emerald green.

The Kerub of Water is formed behind Hiereus and is a power of the great god Toum or Tmu. It has the face and form of a great eagle with large and glistening wings. The colours are mostly blue and orange with some green.

The Kerub of Earth is in the north behind the seat of Stolistes. It is a power of the great god Ahapshi and has the face and form of a bull with heavy darkening wings, and the colours are black, green, red, with some white.

These forms are not described in detail. We are to imagine them there as great stabilizing forces whose forms vary according to circumstances.

3. The Children of Horus:

These have their invisible stations in the corners of the hall. They are the guardians of the viscera of the human being—every part of whom comes up for judgment in its right time and place.

Ameshet: The man-faced is in the northeast. He has a blue nemyss banded with red, blue, and black. His face is red and he has a black ceremonial beard. Round the shoulders of his white mummy shape are bands of red, blue, and black, three times repeated. He stands on red, blue, and black with a border of green, white, and yellow.

Too-oumathph,¹⁸ the jackal-faced, is in the southeast. He has a black face with yellow linings to his pointed ears. He wears a blue nemyss with borders of black, yellow, and blue—the same colours appearing threefold at his shoulders. He has a white mummy shape and stands on blue, yellow, and black, with a border of green, yellow, and mauve.

Kabexnuv, the hawk-faced, is in the northwest. He has a black and tawny face, and a nemyss of black bordered with red, yellow, and black. The same colours appear threefold at his shoulders. He has a white mummy shape and stands on red, yellow, and black with a border of green, mauve, and white.

Ahepi, the ape-faced, is in the southwest. He has a blue nemyss bordered with red, blue, and yellow bands. These colours appear on his shoulders in the same order. His face is red; and he stands on red, blue, and yellow, with a border of green, orange, and mauve.¹⁹

4. The Forty-Two Assessors:

These are not described at all save to say that they make the Sign of the Enterer as the candidate is passed by them. They are witnesses in the judgment hall of Osiris.

THE CANOPIC GODS

The Symbolism of the Four Genii of the Hall of the Neophytes

By G.H. Frater Sub Spe ²⁰

In a temple of the grade of Neophyte, the four gods—Ameshet, Ahephi, Too-oumathph, Kabexnuf—said also to be vicegerents of the elements, and answering to the rivers of Eden as drawn in the warrant of the temple, are said to rule in the four corners of the hall between the stations of the Kerubim.

In Egyptian mythology, these gods are also said to be the children of Horus, and to partake of his symbology. If, now, we regard the Neophyte ceremony as representing the entrance into a new life, regeneration—mors janua vitae ²¹—the Egyptian symbology wherein that idea was so clearly and exactly worked out becomes important. Bear in mind that a new life means a new plane or a higher world, a passing, say, from the Kether of Assiah to the Malkuth of Yetzirah.

Now as behind Kether depend the veils of the negative existence: Ain, Ain Soph, and Ain Soph Aour, so through negative existence must pass the soul that goes from Assiah to Yetzirah, or vice versa. This process is illustrated by the Neophyte ceremony as described in Z.3, and as seen by the clairvoyant eye. In Egyptian mythology, the dead, when the ceremonies are complete, the soul weighed and passed, the body mummied and preserved from corruption, became one with Osiris, and is called an Osirian. Hence, the Hierophant, who represents Osiris when the candidate is placed in the north, speaks to him in the character of his higher soul—“The voice of my undying and secret soul said unto me,” etc.

Osiris, however, is a mummied form, and the body of the Egyptian dead was mummied at this part of the ceremony. Let us now consider the nature of the body which is mummied. The body itself may be considered as a vehicle whereby the life forces act, and the medium whereby these life forces act is what are termed the vital organs. Withdraw or destroy any of these and the life ceases to function in that body. Not less important, then, than the body itself, the vehicle of the soul, are the organs, the media for the action of organic life, and it is equally important to preserve these from corruption, yet not together with the body. For as the body of Osiris was broken up, so must the body of the Osirian be divided. This is the meaning of the viscera being preserved apart from the body.

The death and resurrection of Christ has other symbology and the teachings belong to a higher grade. Let none therefore object that His body was laid in the tomb entire. (The body of Osiris was first laid in the chest or Pastos whole. The division into fourteen parts was subsequent. N.B. one plus four = five, the five wounds.) For even as Yod Heh Vav Heh must be known before Yod Heh Shin Vav Heh can be comprehended, and as Moses must precede Christ, so must the mysteries of Osiris first be known.

Now the guardian of the hall and of the Neophytes against the Qlipboth (whose Kether is Thaumiel, the dual or two-headed one, the demons of corruption and disintegration) is the Hiereus or Horus, and to the children of Horus, who partake of his symbology, are the viscera committed, to guard them against the demons of disintegration and corruption. As the elements and the forces of the elements are to the world, so are the vital organs and the life which animates them to the human body. Appropriately, then, are the vital organs and the life which animates them, placed under the charge of the vicegerents of the elements, the children of Horus, the great gods Ameshet, Ahephi, Too-oumathph, and Kabexnuf, who regulate their functions in material life, and guard them after so-called death, when the man that was has become an Osirian.

Consider then, what are these vital organs and their functions. Broadly they may be divided into the alimentary system and the circulatory system, for in this classification we take no account of the brain or reproductive organs which belong to another classification, and are not elemental nor concerned in the maintenance of the life of the material body.

Each of these divisions may be further divided into that which divides or distributes to the body that which is needed for life, and that which casts out from the body and renders to the Qliploth that which is unnecessary or pernicious. From this arises a four-fold division as in the following diagram:

With this key, the division becomes easy, for in the alimentary system, the stomach and the upper intestines divide the food taken into the system by a process called digestion, and by assimilation retain what is necessary. This therefore is “A” in the diagram. But the lower intestines receive and cast out that which is rejected, these therefore will be represented by “B.” In the circulatory system, the heart is the organ which distributes the blood that it receives washed and purified by the lungs. Hence the lungs and heart are represented by “C.” The matter rejected from the circulatory system is rejected and cast forth by the liver and gallbladder, which therefore will be represented by “D.”

Now as to the treatment of these vital organs in the process of mummification. Seeing that during life they were under the guardianship of the great gods mentioned, so in death they were dedicated each to one of these, who were the four genii of the underworld, or the lesser gods of the dead.

These vital organs then, being taken out and separately embalmed, were placed in egg-shaped receptacles, symbolic of Akasa, under the care of Canopus, the pilot of Menelaus, and the god of the waters of creation, the eternal source of being, whose symbol was a jar; and under the especial protection of that one of the genii of the underworld or vicegerents of the elements to whom that particular organ was dedicated. Hence each egg-shaped package was enclosed in a jar whose lid was shaped like the head of that especial god.

Now Ameshet was also termed “the carpenter” for he it is who by the medium of his organ, the stomach, frames the rough materials and builds up the structure of the body; to him the stomach and upper intestines were dedicated (A).

Ahephi was also termed “the digger” or “burier” for he puts out of sight or removes that which is useless or offensive in the body, and to him the lower intestines or bowels were dedicated (B).

Too-oumathph was also called “the cutter” or “divider” for he divides and distributes the blood bearing with it the prana and the subtle ether by the holy science of breath brought into the body, and to him were the lungs or heart dedicated (C).

Kabexnuf was termed “the bleeder” for as a stream of blood is drawn from the body, so is a stream of impurity drawn from the blood, and cast out into the draught by the action of the liver and gallbladder, and to him therefore, these organs were dedicated (D).

These jars were called Canopic jars and were disposed in a certain order round the mummy. Consider now the points of the compass to which they would naturally be attributed. Reason itself will insist that the organs of the alimentary system, the most material and earthy, should be in the north, and the warm and vital heat of the circulatory system should be to the south, while in the cross division, the receptive and distributive organs should be placed to the east, the source of life and light, and the organs that purify and cast out should be to the west that borders on the Qlipboth.

This gives us the following arrangement:

Yet this arrangement would, as it were, symbolize the entire separation of the alimentary system and the circulatory system, which is contrary to nature, for they continually counterchange, and thus arises life. Wherefore in the Hall of the Two Truths, the portions of Ahephi and Kabexnuf are reversed, and the order becomes.

East—Ameshet
North—Kabexnuf

South—Too-oumathph
West—Ahephi

Now these, being thus arranged, do partake of the symbology of the elements to which they belong. For Ameshet being to the east, the quarter of air, has the head of a man. Too-oumathph, to the south, has the head of a jackal who is the purveyor of the lion (for these are the vicegerents of the elements, while the Kerubim are the lords thereof); so Too-oumathph is properly a jackal. Kabexnuf in the west, in the region of water, has the form of a hawk, the subordinate form to the alchemic eagle of distillation, and the form also, of Horus, the Hiereus, beside whom is his station, and of whose symbology he partakes.

Ahephi, in the north, has the head of an ape. The symbology of the ape in ancient Egypt is very complex. Here it may be taken that while Apis, the bull, represents the divine strength of the eternal gods, the ape represents the elemental strength which is far inferior and blended with cunning. Ahephi, however, has other symbology and other attributes. For by reason of the fertilizing qualities of the Nile and of the fact that what is brought down by the Nile as refuse from the land of the sacred lakes is, to Egypt, its life and the source of its fertility, so there arises a correspondence between the Nile and the lower intestines, and both are under the care of Ahephi (Hapi) who thus was worshipped as Nilus, and in this connection he has for his symbol a headdress of lotus flowers.

Now, further, the alimentary system is under the special guardianship of Isis and Nephthys. Isis who conquers by the power of wisdom and the forces of nature, guards Ameshet. And Nephthys, who hides that which is secret, guards Ahephi—whence also, until recent days, in the fullness of time, the sacred sources of Ahephi, the Nile, were kept secret from the whole world.

Too-oumathph is under the guardianship of Neith, the dawn. This is the celestial space, who makes the morning to pass and awakes the light of a Golden Dawn in the heart of him whom the eternal gods shall choose, by the sacred science of the breath.

Kabexnuf is guarded by Sekhet, the sun at the western equinox, the opening of Amenti, who wears the scorpion on her head—and these guardianships were often painted on the Canopic jars.

When, therefore, the candidate kneels at the foot of the altar, or where the corpse lies on the bier preparatory to the passing over the river towards the west, and the soul stands before Osiris, and the goddesses stand by and watch while the beam sways and the decision is taken—then, the body of the candidate is, as it were, broken up as the body of Osiris was broken, and the higher self stands before the place of the pillars, but the lower self is in the invisible station of the evil persona. Then is the candidate nigh unto death, for then, symbolically, his spirit passes through the veils of the negative existence, passing from the Kether of Assiah to the Malkuth of Yetzirah.

Therefore, unless the genii of the underworld were then present and directing their forces on the vital organs, he must inevitably die.

Let their symbols then be represented in all operations and formulae drawn from the symbolism of the Hall of the Two Truths, for they are of the utmost importance, but as their stations are invisible, so shall their symbols be astral and not material.

Thus shall perfect health of body be preserved, which is of utmost importance in all magical working, and thus shall the lessons of the Hall of the Neophytes be duly carried out in our daily life.

Z.3: THE SYMBOLISM OF THE ADMISSION OF THE CANDIDATE

The Admission of the Candidate

The candidate is waiting without the portal under the care of the Sentinel —“the watcher without”—that is, under the care of the form of Anubis of the West symbolically that he may keep off the “dog-faced demons,” the opposers of Anubis, who rise from the confines where matter ends, to deceive and drag down the soul. The ritual of the thirty-first Path says: “Since ever dragging down the soul and leading it from sacred things, from the confines of matter arise the terrible dog-faced demons never showing a true image unto mortal gaze.”

The Hierophant gives a single knock to announce the just commencement of a vibration in the sphere of sensation of the candidate. He then states that he holds the dispensation from the greatly honored chiefs of the Second Order, to affirm that the effect of the ensuing ceremony upon the candidate is only authorized by the higher powers for the purpose of initiation which shall ultimately lead to the knowledge of his higher self. He is admitted to the grade of Neophyte which has no number, concealing the commencement of all things under the similitude of no thing.

The Hegemon, the representative of the goddess of truth and justice, is consequently sent to superintend the preparation, symbolizing that it is the presider of equilibrium who is to administrate the process of initiation, by the commencement of the forces of equilibrium in the candidate himself, through the symbols of rectitude and self-control. But the actual preparation of the candidate should be performed by the Sentinel—the “watcher without”—to show that this preparation must be accomplished before the establishment of equilibrium can occur. Therefore does the Hegemon superintend the preparation rather than perform it actually. A triple cord is bound round the body of the Neophyte, symbolizing the binding and restriction of the lower nature. It is triple in reference to the white triangle of the three supernals. Then, also, are the eyes bandaged to symbolize that the light of the material world is but darkness and illusion compared with the radiance of the divine light. The preparation also represents a certain temporary binding and restriction of the natural body.

The Hierophant, being a member of the Second Order and therefore initiated into the secret knowledge of the symbolism, shall, together with any officers and members also of the Inner Order, remember what tremendous gods and goddesses they represent—the divine forces of the eternal in the administration of the universe. The ritual should be read in a loud, clear, stern, and solemn voice so as to impress the candidate with the solemnity of the occasion. In this, there should be no foolish nervousness or hesitation, but the ritual as performed by an initiated Hierophant should become in his hands something more than this.

Thus should he act. Let him remember what particular god he represents. Exalting his mind unto the contemplation thereof, let him think of himself as a vast figure, standing or moving in the likeness of that god, colossal, his head lost in the clouds, with the light flashing round it from the headdress of the god—his feet resting upon earth in darkness, thunder and rolling clouds, and his form wrapped in flashes of lightning—the while vibrating the name of the god. Thus standing, let him endeavour to hear the voice of the god whom he represents and of the godforms of the other officers as previously explained.

Let him speak, then, not as if unto an assembly of mortals but as to an assembly of gods. Let his voice be so directed as to roll through the universe to the utmost confines of space. Let the candidate represent unto him, as it were, a world whom he is beginning to lead unto the knowledge of its governing angel. As it is written “The lightning lighteneth out of the east and shineth even unto the west, even so, shall the coming of the Son of Man be.”²²

The candidate during the ceremony is addressed as “child of earth,” as representing the earthly or terrestrial nature of man—he who comes forward from the darkness of Malkuth to endeavour to regain the knowledge of the light. This is what is meant by the speech of the Hegemon, because the path of the initiate is but darkness and foolishness to the natural man. The single knock given by the Hegemon without the door represents the consenting will of the natural man to receive the force formulated by the Hierophant, and is answered by the Kerux within as if a witness were confirming the same. This being done, the Kerux, as a witness, demands authority from the Hierophant to admit the candidate into the Hall of Truth and Justice. The Hierophant, in granting the permission, seals the candidate with a new name given to the physical body of the outward man, but signifying the aspirations of his soul. As a consequence of the affirmation of the motto as the name of the candidate in the Hall of Truth, Osiris at once sends forward the goddess of the scales of the balance to baptize him with water and the companion goddess to consecrate him with fire. As it is written, “Unless a man be born of water and of the spirit, he shall in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven.”²³

The Kerux instantly bars the candidate’s passage to mark that though he has been admitted, the natural man of unpurified desires cannot be a dweller in the Hall of Truth. The goddesses of the scales immediately purify and consecrate him, which operation calls into action the forces of the pillars in his own sphere of sensation. This is the first of four consecrations because when the pillars of the Tree are projected onto the sphere of sensation there are four pillars, of which the Middle Pillar is the axis.²⁴

At this point of the ceremony, the astral appearance of the candidate is that of a form wrapped in darkness as if extinguished thereby, and having unto his right and unto his left the faint semblance of the two great pillars of fire and of cloud, whence issue faint rays into the darkness which covers him. Immediately above his sphere of sensation there will appear a ray of bright light as if preparing to penetrate the darkness covering him. The result of this will be that the candidate, during the whole of the ceremony of admission, will usually appear to be somewhat automatic and vague.

The reception and consecration take place symbolically in the darkest part of Malkuth. The moment this is finished, the candidate is conducted to the foot of the altar, that is under the citrine part of Malkuth which receives the impact of the Middle Pillar. Now the Hegemon throughout the ceremony acts as guide, prompter, and answerer for the candidate. His office towards the candidate is analogous to that of his higher soul—wherefore also, the Hegemon holds in his hand the mitre-headed sceptre to attract, since it is the sceptre of wisdom, the higher self of the candidate.

At this moment, as the candidate stands before the altar, as the simulacrum of the higher self is attracted, so also arises the form of the accuser in the place of the evil triad. This similarly attracts the simulacrum of the evil persona of the candidate, and were it not for the power of the forty-two-lettered name in the palaces of Yetzirah (the gods of which name are usually called the “great assessors of judgment”) the actual evil persona would at once formulate and be able to obsess the ruach of the candidate. For, seeing that at this time, the simulacrum of the higher soul is attracting the neschamah of the candidate, the human will is not as powerful in the ruach for the moment, because the aspirant of the mysteries is now, as it were, divided. That is, his neschamah is directed to the contemplation of his higher self attracted by the Hegemon. His natural body is bound and blinded, his ruach threatened by the simulacrum of the evil persona attracted by Omoo-Szathan, and a species of shadow of himself thrown forward to the place of the pillars, where the scales of judgment are set. At the same time that the first consecration establishes a semblance of the pillars to his right and left, it also has drawn forth from him a semblance of himself to the place vacated by the Hegemon between the pillars.²⁵

Here then stands the shadow of the candidate while the scales of the balance oscillate unseen. Unseen also and colossal, there is imaged before him Tho-oth, as Metatron, in the Sign of the Enterer of the Threshold, ready, according to the decision of the human will, to permit or withhold the descent of the lower genius of the candidate.

Meanwhile, the great assessors of judgment examine into the truth of the accusations formulated by the evil and averse antithesis. The assessors of judgment come not under the head of invisible stations, but during the obligation and circumambulation of the candidate, until he is brought to the light, they hover immediately about the limits of the temple and their evil antithesis immediately below. Therefore, when the candidate stands before the altar before the obligation, is the decision actually taken by the human will of the candidate. Rarely in his life has he been nearer death, seeing that he is, as it were, disintegrated into his component parts. The process of symbolic judgment takes place during the speech of the Hierophant to the candidate, the answer of the Hegemon and his consent to take the obligation.

The moment the candidate thus consents, the Hierophant advances between the pillars as if to assert that the judgment is concluded. He advances by the invisible station of Harpocrates to that of the evil triad, which he symbolically treads down, so that as Aroueris he stands upon the opposer. He then comes to the east of the altar, interposing between the place of the evil triad and the candidate. At the same time, the Hiereus advances on the candidate's left, the Hegemon on his right, thus formulating about him the symbol of the higher triad before he places his hand upon the symbol of the three supernals upon the altar. Again, before doing so, he has been bidden to kneel in adoration of that symbol, as if the natural man abrogated his will before that of the divine consciousness.

As he kneels in the presence of the triad of Aroueris, Thmaa-est, and Horus, he places his left hand in that of his initiator as affirming his passive reception of the ritual, but his right hand is on the white triangle as symbolizing his active aspiration towards his higher self. His head is bowed as representing the voluntary submission of the human will to the divine—and for this latter reason he repeats in the obligation his name in the outer world.

The Hierophant gives one knock, affirming that the submission unto the higher is perfect. Only at this moment does the invisible and colossal figure of Tho-oth cease to be in the Sign of the Enterer and give the Sign of Silence, permitting the first real descent of the genius of the candidate, who descends to the invisible station of Harpocrates as a witness of the obligation.

The Hiererus and the Hierophant return to their thrones, and therefore it is not Aroueris, but Osiris himself that addresses the speech to the candidate —“The voice of my higher self,” ²⁶ etc., which confirms the link established between the neschamah and the genius by formulating the conception thereof into the ruach. For this, Osiris speaks in the character of the higher soul, the symbolic form of which is standing between the columns before him. The affirmation of the higher soul as the god of the man does not mean that this is the only god, but rather that it is the only presentment of him which the natural man can grasp at all. Neither is it just to say that the higher soul is one with God, seeing that the part is by no means the whole, nor can the whole be accurately and sufficiently described as an assemblage of parts. Let not the reverence for the God of thy self cause thee by a misconception to lose thy reverence for the gods who live forever—the aeons of infinite years. Herein is a great error and one which may, in its ultimatum, bring about the fall of the genius, a sin which entails none the less terrible consequences because it is a sin of the higher plane where the choice is not between good and evil but between the higher and the lower forms of good.

Therefore is the mystic circumambulation in the path of darkness led by the Kerux with the symbolic light, as formulating that the higher soul is not the only divine light but rather a spark from the ineffable flame—and the Kerux, in his turn, is but the watcher of the gods. After the Kerux comes the Hegemon, the translator of the higher self, leading the candidate; and then come the goddesses of the scales of the balance, the Stolistes and the Dadouchos. They move once round; the formation in darkness of the Binah angle of the white triangle of the three supernals. The Hierophant knocks once as they pass him in affirmation of mercy—the Hiereus in affirmation of severity; and the invisible assessors each give the Sign of the Enterer as the candidate passes on his way. At the second passing of the Hierophant, the knock affirms the commencement of the angle of Chokmah.

The Kerux bars the candidate's approach to the west to mark that the natural man cannot obtain the understanding of even the son of Osiris unless by purification and equilibrium. Again is the candidate purified and consecrated, the pillars about his sphere of sensation being rendered more manifest. After this second consecration, the candidate is allowed to approach the place of "the twilight of the gods" and for a brief space the hoodwink is slipped up, to present a glimpse, but a glimpse only, of the beyond. In the challenge of the Hiereus to know the name is signified the knowledge of the formula. For if the formula of Horus be not with the candidate, that of Osiris cannot be grasped. But to the candidate the power of Horus as yet can only appear as a terrible and incomprehensible force—"the force of the avenger of the gods," whence the speech of the Hegemon for him. The candidate cannot as yet comprehend that before mildness can be exercised rightly, the forces of severity and mercy must be known and wielded, but to accomplish this the greatest courage and energy is required and not hysterical weakness and absence of resolution in action. Hence in the answer of the Hiereus is an affirmation of the necessity of courage and of the danger of fear, and he gives one knock to seal the vibration of that force imaged in the candidate's sphere of sensation.

The next barring and consecration of the candidate is an extension of the previous one and the commencement of the formulation of the angle of Kether. The hoodwink is again slipped up giving a still further glimpse of the nature of the divine light, though to the mind of the candidate, an imperfect one. Therefore it is to him, as expressed in the answer of the Hegemon, a light dimly seen through the darkness, yet heralding a glory beyond. The speech of the Hierophant formulates the forces of the hidden central pillar. After this, the candidate passes to the Altar of the Universe, which receives the influences of the three pillars, as though then the ray from the divine would descend into the darkness of the mind, for then, but not till then, is he fitted to realize what are the first things necessary to the “search for the shining light.”

The Hierophant now leaves his throne and passes between the pillars, either halting there during the prayer or halting at the places of Harpocrates, or that of the evil triad, or east of the altar. It does not particularly matter which, but one of them may seem more appropriate to a particular candidate than another, and the Hierophant will usually find that he halts at the right place instinctively.

The Hiereus stands on the left of the candidate, the Hegemon on his right, thus forming the triad of the supernals. The Kerux, Stolistes, and Dadouchos represent an inferior and supporting triad behind him as if they affirmed that he has passed the judgment of the balance. It is best, though not absolutely necessary, that the Hierophant and the Hiereus should hold their banners. In any case, it should be done astrally.

The higher self of the candidate will be formulated in the invisible station of Harpocrates behind the Hierophant, who in his present position is Aroueris. The Hierophant gives a single knock to seal the matter and then invokes the Lord of the Universe. Then only is the hoodwink removed definitely.

The Hierophant, Hiereus, and Hegemon join sceptres and sword above the candidate's head, thus formulating the supernal triad, and assert his reception into the Order. They recite the mystic words to seal the current of the flowing light.

The higher self remains in the station of Harpocrates, and at this point, the spirit-vision should see a gleaming white triangle formulated over the candidate's head.

The Hierophant now calls forward the Kerux, cautioning the candidate that the light has preceded him without his knowledge. It represents to him here a vague formulation of ideas which as yet he can neither grasp nor analyse. This light is not a symbol of his higher self, but a ray from the gods to lead him thereto.

Only after having thus been brought to the light is the candidate led to the east of the altar—the place of the station of the evil triad—to affirm that with this light he will be able to cast out and trample on his own evil persona which, when it has been put in its place, will then become a support to him. It is to the Hiereus, “the avenger of the gods” therefore, that the duty of entrusting the candidate with the secret signs, etc., is delegated. It is he who places him for the first time between the pillars and superintends his final consecration—thus bringing the peculiar force in matter of the Hiereus to the aid of the candidate, so that he may more safely and resolutely combat the temptations of the evil persona.

The Hierophant has returned to his throne while the Hegemon holds the insignia of the Hiereus while he confers the signs, etc. She thus affirms the necessity of the force represented by the Hiereus to the candidate.

The Hierophant on the throne, the Hiereus east of the black pillar, and the Hegemon east of the white pillar again form a triad which here represents the reflection of the three supernals. The higher soul is formulated between the pillars in the place of equilibrium. The candidate is in the place of the evil triad and the Hiereus now advances to the place of Harpocrates between the pillars to give the words.

After the giving of the words and signs, the Hiereus draws the candidate forward between the pillars and for the second time in the ceremony, the higher soul stands near and ready to touch him. The Hiereus returns to his place east of the black pillar so that the three chief officers may formulate and draw down to the candidate, by their insignia, and the influence of their symbols, the forces of the supernal triad. It is important, therefore, that at this point, they should be in these places.

The candidate now stands between the pillars, bound with a rope like the mummied form of Osiris, between Isis and Nephthys. The final consecration now takes place by the goddesses of the scales of the balance. The candidate stands for the first time during the ceremony at the point representing the equilibrium of the balance. Meanwhile, the Kerux goes to the north, ready for the circumambulation so as to link that with the final consecration of the candidate. The final consecration is also demanded by the Hiereus—Horus, the powerful avenger of Osiris, as still menacing the evil persona of the candidate. Its effect is to seal finally, in balanced formation, the four pillars in the sphere of sensation of the candidate. This does not imply that they were not naturally there before. But in the natural man, the symbols are unbalanced in strength—some being weaker and some stronger. The effect of the ceremony is to strengthen the weak, to purify the strong, and so begin to equilibrate them and at the same time make a link between them and the corresponding forces of the macrocosm.

This being done, the Hierophant commands the removal of the rope which has hitherto been purposely retained, symbolically to restrain the actions of the natural man, whose temptation is towards the evil persona.

The four pillars being thus firmly established, the candidate is invested with the badge of the white triangle of the three supernals formulating in darkness. Now, also, the higher self is enabled in reality to form a link with him, if the human will of the natural man be in reality consenting thereto. The free will of the natural man is never obsessed either by the higher soul or by the ceremony, but, the will consenting, the whole of the ceremony is directed to strengthening its action. As the badge is placed upon him, it is as if the two great goddesses, Isis and Nephthys, stretched forth their wings over Osiris to restore him again to life.

The mystic circumambulation follows in the path of light to represent the rising of light in the candidate, through the operation of self-sacrifice. As he passes the Hierophant's throne the red Calvary Cross is astrally formed above the astral white triangle on his forehead, so that so long as he belongs to the Order, he may bear that potent and sublime symbol as a link with his higher self and as an aid in searching out the forces of the divine light—if he will.

The higher soul or genius now returns to the invisible station of Harpocrates, the place of the hidden centre, yet continuing to retain the link formed with the candidate. The address of the Hierophant is intended simply to effect the distinct formulation of the symbols of the $0^{\circ} = 0^{\square}$ grade of Neophyte in the candidate, and it is therefore only when this is finished that the watcher Anubis announces that the candidate has been duly admitted as an initiated Neophyte.

The Hiereus is charged with a warning address as again confirming the will of the candidate and addressing a final menace to the evil persona. The Hierophant then states clearly what the candidate must begin to study. He affirms that the symbols must be equilibrated in the sphere of sensation before a link can be formulated between them and the forces of the macrocosm. The necessity of examination is insisted upon so that this may be completely done.

The Kerux then pours out the two fluids to make the semblance of blood. This is to fix in the candidate's sphere the symbols of the forces of transmutation in nature and also to make an astral link between these and the candidate's physical life, as a guard of the secrecy of the mysteries. This particular form of transmutation is used as showing the effect of a mixture of forces as producing a third appearance totally different from them. The red colour is symbolic of the blood of the candidate. In the ancient mysteries, the candidate's blood was actually drawn at this time and preserved as an avenging link in case of his proving unworthy. Our transmutation effects the matter quite as well, seeing that the astral link is formally established.

The final speech of the Hierophant is further intended besides its apparent meaning, to affirm that a person only partially initiated is neither fitted to teach nor to instruct even the outer and more ignorant in sublime knowledge. He is certain, through misunderstanding the principles, to formulate error instead of truth.

Closing

The greater part of the closing ceremony is explained by the opening. The reverse circumambulation, however, is intended to formulate the withdrawal of the light of the supernal triad from the altar, so that it may not be profaned by abiding without due guard. Not that the divine light would suffer thereby, but because it might initiate an avenging current if profaned. This is what is implied by the law of Moses in the prohibition about offering unconsecrated fire either before or within the Veil of the Tabernacle. As a vibratory formula, the reverse circumambulation represents the reversal of the current and the restoration of the operator to his ordinary condition.

The mystic repast then follows. It is a communion in the body of Osiris. Its mystic name is “the formula of the Justified One,” and it is sufficiently explained in the section concerning the altar.

The Kerux, in finishing, inverts the cup, as the watcher of the god, to show that the symbols of self-sacrifice and of regeneration are accomplished. The proclamation is confirmed by the Hierophant and the chief officers giving the three strokes, emblematic of the mystic triad, and they repeat the mystic words.

The Hierophant, in his final speech, seals the link first formulated between the members and the supernal triad for each one present that it may prove, to him or her, a guide for the ultimate attainment of the supreme initiation—if he will.

The Symbolism and Meaning of the Step, Signs, Grip or Token, and the Words

They have this threefold interpretation:

1. Apparent meaning.
2. Spiritual or mystical reference.
3. Practical application.

Each is therefore considered under three heads.

The Step

1. The foot is advanced about six inches representing the foot on the side of Chesed put forward and taking a hesitating step in darkness—the left foot, to represent the power of Isis or the beginning of action rather than Nephthys as the end thereof. The term six inches is employed here only to render it more intelligible to English initiates. It means a convenient measure of six, and preferably six times the measure of the phalanx of the thumb—spirit and will.

2. It symbolizes the beginning of the stamping down of the evil persona. The foot is advanced six metrical distances answering to the number six of Tiphareth—Osiris—alluding therefore to the self-sacrifice necessary to accomplish this.

3. It represents the practical application of the beginning of a magical force. Let the adept, in using the Sign of the Enterer, give the step as he commences the sign and let him imagine himself colossal, clothed with the form of the god or goddess appropriate to the work—his head reaching to the clouds—his feet resting upon earth. And let him take the step as if he stamped upon the earth and the earth quaked and rocked beneath him. As it is said “Clouds and darkness are round about Him—lightnings and thunders the habitation of His feet.” Its secret name is “the step of the avenger.”

The Saluting Sign

1. That of groping forward in search of truth.
2. It represents the involution and bringing forward of the light into the material to aid the will of the candidate in his search for and aspiration towards the higher.

3. Standing as before described, in the form of the god, and elevating the mind to the contemplation of Kether, take the step like a stroke with the foot, bring the arms up above the head as if touching the Kether, and as the step is completed bring the hands over the head forwards. Thrust them out direct from the level of the eyes horizontally—arms extended, fingers straight, palms downwards, the hands directed towards the object it is wished to charge or to affect. At the same time, sink the head till the eyes look exactly between the thumbs. In this way, the rays from the eyes, from each finger, and from the thumbs, must all converge upon the object attacked. If any of them disperse, it is a weakness.

Thus performed, this sign is a symbol of tremendous attacking force and of projection of willpower, and it should be employed in all cases where force of attack is required—especially in charging of talismans and the like. Generally, it is best to have the thumbs and all the fingers extended—but if a particular effect is desired, you may extend only the fingers appropriate thereto, keeping the rest folded back in the hand. Herewith also, may be combined the attribution of the planets to the head: (Mars to the right nostril, Mercury to the mouth, etc., as explained in the Microcosm Lecture), sending at the same time an imaginary ray of colour of the planet desired from the part of the head attributed to it. But, when finished, be careful to withdraw the rays again or they will remain like so many outlets of astral force and thus exhaust you. The best way to protect yourself against this is to give the Sign of Silence immediately. For the first sign should always be answered by the second. The secret names of the saluting signs are “the Attacking Sign” or “the Sign of the Enterer of the Threshold.”

The Sign of Silence

1. This is simply that of secrecy regarding the mysteries.
2. It is the affirmation of the station of Harpocrates, wherein the higher soul of the candidate is formulated in part of the admission ceremony. It is the symbol of the centre and of the “voice of the silence” which answers in secret the thought of the heart.

3. The Sign of Silence withdraws the force put out by the Sign of the Enterer. Take upon thyself as before taught the colossal form of the god Harpocrates. Bring the left foot sharply back, both heels together—beat the ground once with the left foot as it is placed beside the right. Bring the left hand to the mouth and touch the centre of the lower lip with the left forefinger. Close the other fingers and thumb, and drop the right hand to the side. Imagine that a watery vapor encircles and encloses you. This is the reflux of the current.

This sign is also used as a protection against attack. The sign represents a concentration of astral light about the person. Having given the sign as above, it is a protection against all attack and danger of obsession. To make it yet stronger, the form of the god should be taken. If spiritual force is required, formulate as if standing on a lotus or rising from it. For force in contemplation and meditation, formulate as if seated upon a lotus, but for more material force, as if standing upon a dragon or a serpent like some statues of Harpocrates. As a defence and protection, the sign is as strong as the banishing pentagram, though of a different nature. And as the Sign of the Enterer represents attack, so does this sign represent defence thereto, as a shield is a defence against the sword. From this sign is a formula of invisibility derived.²⁷

The secret names of this sign are “the Sign of the God of Silence” or the “Sign of Defence or Protection.” It may be performed with any finger of either hand, but it is most protective when the left forefinger is used, the water of Chesed, for the fingers of the right hand represent more violent action, and those of the left more watery action. (If you have not a convenient implement, a sigil or a pentagram may be traced with any finger of any hand according to the correspondence required.)

It may here be remarked that the so-called Christian sign of benediction, consisting of the thumb and first two fingers only, projected, is the affirmation of Osiris, Isis, and Nephthys—or spirit, fire, and water.

With regard to taking on mentally the forms of the gods, it may here be noted that the process is of great assistance and use in all magical working, whether of invocation or of evocation, contemplation, meditation, slaying in the spirit vision, alchemy, etc. For the forms of the gods do here represent a certain symbolic material action of the divine forces.

The Grip and the Password

1. The steps are taken and the grip exchanged simultaneously. They mean seeking guidance in the darkness and silence of the mysteries.

2. It shows that a steady and resolute will, acting in union with good, will accomplish what it desires, no matter how often it fails at first. It inculcates the necessity for harmony and brotherly love—of doing away with pettiness and of too much self-concentration—for allowances for the weaknesses of others within limits—of shunning resolutely anything in the nature of slander. So that in the grip of the Neophyte the initiates meet hand to hand and foot to foot in the true greeting of a brother or sister, and not in the veiled hostility of an enemy. For, in the working of the Inner, where all invoke the same forces in the same manner, he or she becomes unsympathetic with the rest, separates himself or herself from them, and though he weakens the combination of working, yet he still more certainly attracts upon himself a reflex current from the avengers of evil.

The name of the god of silence which is the grand word of this grade also represents the silence of the sacred mysteries to be observed towards the Outer Order. It shows also the necessity for respect towards the secrets of any frater or soror committed to your care, not endeavouring to search them out for purposes of curiosity nor repeating them when discovered, nor in any way referring to them so as to wound the other, nor in any way employing them as a means of causing humiliation, but to keep them as a sacred trust and not to be deflected by them from acting justly and harmoniously together.

3. In any magical ceremony, or other working, if more than one member be taking part, all present, putting themselves into the form of the god as taught, should exchange sign, grip, and words, so as to establish a current of harmony and the affirmation of a mutual direction of will towards the same object.

The Password

1. Merely to guard the secrets of the Order against any members resigned or not working; hence changed each equinox.

2. It is an affirmation of the different spiritual as well as the different physical constitutions of the candidates—that all natures cannot be the same without evil and injury resulting thereby—but that each nature should be brought to its own Kether—the best of its kind. This too, may be done in all things. It is the basis of alchemy.

3. It should be pronounced as if attracting the solar force, the light of nature, during the six months following the equinox at which it is issued, as a link with the solar force, between that and the order. This password, therefore, may also be used in a magical ceremony as attracting the support of the light of nature acting upon natural forces.

The Ceremony of the Equinox

The whole formulae of the Ceremony of the Equinox are intended to create a magical link between the sun, as the light of nature, and the Order; and it should be celebrated within forty-eight hours at least of the sun's actual entry into Aries or Libra. The single knock given by the Hierophant heralds the initiation of a fresh current. The password, as already explained, is the symbol of the connecting link of the purpose of the ceremony and therefore, before beginning fresh operation to attract a fresh current, the Kerux proclaims that the former password is abrogated. In the whole ceremony, save at the exchange of insignia, the Hierophant, Hiereus, Hegemon, Stolistes, and Dadouchos remain in their places—the Kerux, or watcher of the gods, being the only one who moves.

First comes the establishment of a vertical current in the direction of the middle column by the exchange of words between the Hierophant and the Hiereus, while the Hegemon, who is in the whole Ceremony of the Equinox the important officer, by reason of his insignia, seals and arrests the current in the centre by a single knock and the words “I am the reconciler between them.” Then follows the cross current established between the Stolistes and Dadouchos—again fixed and sealed by the Hegemon, thus symbolizing the equilateral cross of the elements (of which the centre would naturally be about the invisible station of Harpocrates) but is arrested by the Hegemon between the columns. The cross currents are thus thrown into the image of the Calvary Cross of the rivers to ally it with the symbolism of Tiphareth and of the Sephiroth.

Then the Hierophant, Dadouchos, Hiereus, and Stolistes formulate a circle enclosing the symbol, which is again sealed by the Hegemon. Then the officers, being careful to follow the course of the sun, deposit in turn their insignia upon the altar, taking therefrom instead the mystical symbols of the body of Osiris corresponding to their cardinal points. The Hegemon takes the lamp of Kerux. The Kerux then circumambulates, halting at the cardinal points and facing them, representing the course of the sun through the zodiac in order to attract the solar ray, but under the control of its superior, the light of Osiris, and the adorations are performed at the stations of the Kerubim to mark the limits of the circle.

This time, it is with the lamp of the watcher of the gods and with the sign of the Calvary Cross of Tiphareth that the Hegemon seals in the centre the solar light. The formal assertion of the entry of a new current of light is proclaimed, and the mystic words are recited to close the ceremony.

From this ceremony there are many practical formulae derivable which will be easily comprehended by the Zelator Adeptus Minor who has mastered the whole of this lecture. Only let him remember that the formulae of the ceremony of the equinox represents the sudden attraction and sealing of a force in nature then in operation—rather than a continuous and graduated ceremony to build up the same. Consequently also, it is well to use the password then in being as an adjunct to the other names employed in magical ceremonies as bringing into operation the link with the solar light.

Notes on the Opening Exordium of “Z”

The great Tho-oth is the highest aspect of the Hermes of the most ancient Egyptian mysteries, and corresponds almost to the great angel Metatron. It is the archangel of Kether in the Briatic world. The Mercury of the Romans must not be confused with this great Hermes.

The doctrines of Gnosticism and of Valentinus approached those of the pure Qabalah. In them we find Speech and Silence. Across the abyss of Silence comes the primal Speech. The divine ones here referred to are the aeons in the Atziluthic world. These formulae of knowledge are designed in terms cognizable to us in the lower world.

Eheieh—implicit and explicit sound. “Every being pronounces all its existence, the name of the Lord of life, by inspiration and expiration.”

Macroprosopus is Aima and Abba, Mother—Father. The two nostrils pass up and down the two breaths, as through the two great pillars. These throw all things into vibration; compare the Rashith ha-Gilgalim. Piercing of the dragon’s coils suggests the freeing of Malkuth, which is also referred to as the washing of the garments of the queen, the inferior mother. Then comes the breaking forth of the light. Over Malkuth as guardians are Metatron and Sandalphon as the two pillars, and Nephesch ha-Messiah, the animal soul of Messiah, the Shekinah or presence between the Kerubim.

The Particular Exordium

The bornless ones of time referred to are those coruscations of the divine light which are above Kether of Atziluth. In such supernal realms, the Ain Soph, though negative to us, is there intensely positive. Thence came forth the gods, the voice, the aeons, and the name.

The Egyptian gods are generally most differentiated by their crowns: Amen-Ra by the high feathers, Mo-ooth (Maut) has the same headdress as Horus. She corresponds to Aima Elohim. The high Hermes-Tho-oth has the same headdress as Amoun Kneph, the sacred spirit. Remember that Tho-oth, Truth, has two aspects—the higher and the lower. The higher is absolute; the lower is suitable to human comprehension. To tell the higher form of a truth to one who cannot understand it is to lie to him because, though correctly formulated, it will not be correctly received.

The Forms of Thmaah

There are four forms of spelling for the goddess Thma-Est whereby she is attributable to the four letters of the name, and therewith to the elements and the Tree.

Water. Binah. Heh.

Thma-oe-Tt

Air. Tiphareth. Vau.

Thm-a-oe-St

Fire. Chokmah. Yod.

Thma-oe-Sh

Earth. Malkuth. Heh (final)

Thm-a-Oe

(The Middle Pillar)

In the Equinox Ceremony, the Hegemon is air, spirit, and the principal officer. She reconciles from east to west, and from north to south, and in a circular formula.

Z.2: THE FORMULAE OF THE MAGIC OF LIGHT

An Introduction to the Practical Working of the Z.2 Formulae

By G.H. Frater S.R.M.D.²⁸

In the Ritual of the Enterer are shadowed forth symbolically the beginning of certain of the formulae of the magic of light. For this ritual betokeneth a certain person, substance, or thing, which is taken from the dark world of matter, to be brought under the operation of the divine formulae of the magic of light.

Also herein are contained the commencements of all formulas of evocation, the development of which is further shown in the inner knowledge of the succeeding grades of the Outer Order. In the true knowledge of the application of the symbolism of the “Enterer” lies the entrance to the knowledge of practical magic: and therefore are all the formulae drawn from the ritual classed under five several heads, according unto the letters of the name Yeheshuah.

For to the letter Yod , and the element of fire belong the works of ceremonial magic, as the evocations of the spirits of the elements, etc.

Unto the first Heh ׀ the consecration and charging of telemata, and the production of natural phenomena, as storms, earthquakes, etc.

Unto the great holy letter Shin ׃ are allotted three classes of works: spiritual development, transformations, and invisibility.

Unto the letter Vau ׅ divination in all its branches; and the art of making the link between the subject of the work and the process of divination.

And to the final Heh ׀ the works and operations of the art of alchemy, the order of its processes and transmutation.

Foreword by Israel Regardie (Frater A.M.A.G.)

This document, which was presented to advanced members of the Zelator Adeptus Minor grade, lists under the name of the Pentagrammaton several modes of magical working. It comprises, altogether, seven formulae. For the first five of these, I have provided herewith examples of the appropriate kind of ritual in order to enable the reader or student to form some notion of their nature. They are not produced here that they may be slavishly followed, since they are purely personal productions. My motive in including them is only to assist the student as showing him a completed type of ceremony. The formula for spiritual development, so-called, is represented by two distinct rituals each quite different in structure, yet equally efficacious in its own especial way. The Bornless Ritual, the second of the two, was reproduced in rudimentary form in my Tree of Life. Because of the excellent dovetailing of certain Order formulae and speeches with the barbarous words of the older ritual, rendering it in practice a magnificent and inspiring ceremony, I have decided to republish it here so that interested students may observe how older fragments may be treated.

So far as the writer is concerned, the section on divination never acquired much meaning, but it was thought advisable to retain it in the event that significance may be seen in it by others. As an example of the first stages of that mode of operation, there is given an experience recorded many years ago by G.H. Frater Sub Spe,²⁹ and to some it may prove suggestive. The section on alchemy remains quite obscure since the subject does not interest me; and I regret that I have not been able to acquire a record of an operation based on it.³⁰

The Requiem Ritual is an original contribution, though based on fundamental formulae, and I hope it will be found useful.

So far as the first sections on actual ceremonial magic are concerned a few remarks may seem appropriate. Let it be noted first of all that a formal circle and triangle are required only in that type of operation called evocation. It is preferable to paint the circle and divine names on the floor or on canvas, or on a neutral coloured sheet of linoleum so that the circle and names appear brilliant and clear cut. But for convenience's sake, and for quicker working, it is useful to lay out a circle in coloured tapes. The colour naturally will depend on the nature of the ceremony. At the appropriate angles of quarters of this taped circle, pentacles or flashing tablets of the requisite divine names or symbols may be placed.

The other ceremonies, consecration and invisibility for example, require no such device, for the performance of the Banishing Rituals of the Pentagram and Hexagram followed by the consecrations—either as in the Neophyte ceremony or as in the opening by watchtower—clears a space for working which is amply protected. This procedure suffices for most operations, though in evocation the greatest precautions and protections are necessary, and these are afforded by the presence of the circle and divine names.

A great deal of attention should be paid to that part of the ceremony demanding the invocation of the higher. Success herein spells success for the entire ceremony. That is, there should be a clear consciousness of the presence of the divine force coursing through the operator. He should become aware of the awakening of a titanic force within him. It is an unmistakable sensation. So strong and powerful can this become that at times it may almost seem to be a physical one. If this invocation is slurred over or inconsequentially performed, then a great deal of power must be expended unnecessarily on the remaining parts of the ritual in order to redeem the entire operation from failure. And the operation would suffer from the disadvantage of having been effected by the human part of the magician, instead of by his own higher genius. If the vibratory formula of the Middle Pillar is very powerfully employed, using the name appropriate to the operation on hand, and if the force thus invoked is distributed throughout the sphere of sensation by the formulae of the mystic circumambulation—both of which are fully described in Z.1, Book Five—then the chances of success are great. It is imperative to stress this point for it is my belief that the greater number of the cases of failure in, let us say, evocation are due solely to hastening past this important stage to the actual and stated purpose of the ceremony. This haste causes failure. Failure brings about disappointment in the formula as a whole. This is why so little work has been done on this particular system of magic.

In passing, may I say that before the vibratory formula of the Middle Pillar can be at all successfully employed, the student should have put in a great deal of work on the exercise called the formulation of the Middle Pillar. This exercise, described in the Portal paper reprinted in Part One and at great length in my book The Middle Pillar, awakens the magical centres in the psycho-spiritual make-up of the student. Needless to say, that without the power derived, directly or indirectly, from these Sephirotic centres or chakras, there can be no successful magic. When a certain amount of success has been obtained in this formulation, then the vibratory formula should be assiduously practised. Its results are salutary—and quite apart from the spiritual and psychic effect, which is that to be aimed at, its reaction incidentally on the physical health and vitality is so marked as almost to be miraculous.

The two important adjuncts to success in ceremonial magic are briefly the godform and the vibration of the divine name. The assumption of the appropriate form of the Egyptian god—or the telematic image especially built up by the imagination based upon the signification of the letters of the name—and the powerful vibration of the name itself by the vibratory formula of the Middle Pillar are bound, if all other conditions are complied with, to yield salutary results. The symbolic godform held firmly in the imagination, the name vibrated with great force—then the subsequent invocations, and the gradual materialization or other manifestation of the force, require practically no effort. The most frequent mistake, and of course a natural one, is to concentrate upon the stated purpose of the operation.

The type of invocation of the higher employed in most of the ceremonies shown here has no authority obtaining within the Order. It is fundamentally the result of my own spiritual bias. The higher invocations more usually employed within the Order approximate to the nature of ordinary prayers. These, for many reasons into which I do not wish to enter, do not please me.

The procedure delineated above should of course be followed in all other types of ceremonial—for the consecration of flashing tablets and talismans; and especially in operations striving towards invisibility or transformation is the successful invocation of the divine force necessary.

One final word as to these ceremonies. The student is not to assume that these operations in themselves are important. That is, from the spiritual point of view, the fact that the magician can attain invisibility or effect a transformation or a materialization is relatively unimportant. What does matter however, is that these operations comprise a discipline and a type of training which is almost indispensable in the serious labours of spiritual development. The student who has struggled with these formulae, and who has kept his aspiration to the divine keen and untarnished, has a disciplined and a powerful instrument at his command.

Index for General Reference to the Enterer Ceremony of the 0° = 0th Grade

1. A—The ceremony itself. The place of the temple.
2. B—The Hierophant.
3. C—The officers.
4. D—The candidate.
5. E—The ceremony of opening.
6. F—Hierophant states that he has received a dispensation from Second Order, and commands Hegemon to prepare candidate. Candidate prepared. Speech of Hegemon.
7. G—Admission of candidate. First barring by Kerux. First baptism of the candidate with water and fire.

8. H—The candidate is conducted to the foot of the altar. Hierophant asks “Wherefore hast thou come,” etc. Candidate replies “I seek the hidden light,” etc.
9. I—Candidate is asked whether he is willing to take the obligation. He assents and is instructed now to kneel at the altar.
10. J—Administration of the obligation, and raising the Neophyte from the kneeling position.
11. K—Candidate is placed in the north. Oration of the Hierophant, “The voice of my higher self,” etc. Hierophant commands the mystic circumambulation in the path of darkness.
12. L—Procession. Candidate barred in south. Second baptism of water and fire. Speech of Hegemon. Allowing the candidate to proceed.
13. M—Hoodwink slipped up. Challenge of Hiereus. Speech of Hegemon. Speech of Hiereus. Candidate re-veiled and passed on.
14. N—Circumambulation. Barred in north. Third baptism. Speech of Hegemon allowing candidate to approach unto the gate of the east.
15. O—Hoodwink slipped up for the second time. Hierophant challenges. Hegemon answers for candidate. Speech of Hierophant. Candidate passes on.
16. P—Candidate led to west of altar. Hierophant advances by the Path of Samekh. Officers form the triangle. Prayer of Hierophant.
17. Q—Candidate rises. Hierophant addresses him, “Long hast thou dwelt in darkness. Quit the night and seek the day.” Hoodwink finally removed. Sceptres and swords joined. “We receive thee,” etc. Then the mystic words.
18. R—Hierophant indicates lamp of Kerux. He commands that the candidate be conducted to the east of the altar. He orders Hiereus to bestow signs, etc. Hiereus places candidate between pillars. Signs and words. He orders the fourth and final consecration to take place.

19. S—Hegemon removes rope and invests candidate with his insignia. Hiereus then ordains the mystic circumambulation in the path of light.
20. T—Hierophant lectures on the symbols. Proclamation by Kerux.
21. U—Hierophant commands Hiereus to address candidate.
22. V—Hierophant addresses Neophyte on subject of study.
23. W—Blood produced. Speech of Kerux. Hiereus's final caution.
24. X—The closing takes place.

EVOCATION

A—The magic circle.

B—The magician, wearing the great lamen of the Hierophant and his scarlet robe. A pentacle, whereon is engraved the sigil of the spirit to be invoked, has painted on the back of it the circle and cross as shown on the Hierophant's lamen.

C—The names and formulae to be employed.

D—The symbol of the whole evocation.

E—The construction of the circle and the placing of all the symbols, etc., employed, in the places properly allotted to them, so as to represent the interior of a G.D. temple in the Enterer, and the purification and consecration of the actual piece of ground or place, selected for the performance of the evocation.

F—The invocation of the higher powers. Pentacle formed of three concentric bands, name and sigil therein, in proper colours, is to be bound thrice with a cord, and shrouded in black, thus bringing into action a blind force to be further directed or differentiated in the process of the ceremony. Announcement aloud of the object of the working; naming the spirit or spirits, which it is desired to evoke. This is pronounced standing in the centre of the circle and turning towards the quarter from which the spirit will come.

G—The name and sigil of the spirit, wrapped in a black cloth, or covering, is now placed within the circle, at the point corresponding to the west, representing the candidate. The consecration or baptism by water and fire of the sigil then takes place, and the proclamation in a loud and firm voice of the spirit (or spirits) to be evoked.

H—The veiled sigil is now to be placed at the foot of the altar. The magician then calls aloud the name of the spirit, summoning him to appear, stating for what purpose the spirit is evoked, what is desired in the operation, why the evocation is performed at this time, and finally solemnly affirming that the spirit shall be evoked by the ceremony.

I—Announcement aloud that all is prepared for the commencement of the actual evocation. If it be a good spirit the sigil is now to be placed within the white triangle on the altar, the magician places his left hand upon it, raises in his right hand the magical implement employed (usually the sword) erect; and commences the evocation of the spirit N. to visible appearance. The magician stands in the place of the Hierophant during the obligation, irrespective of the particular quarter of the spirit.

But if the nature of that spirit be evil, then the sigil must be placed without and to the west of the white triangle and the magician shall be careful to keep the point of the magical sword upon the centre of the sigil.

J—Now let the magician imagine himself as clothed outwardly with the semblance of the form of the spirit to be evoked, and in this let him be careful not to identify himself with the spirit, which would be dangerous; but only to formulate a species of mask, worn for the time being. And if he knows not the symbolic form of the spirit, then let him assume the form of an angel belonging unto the same class of operation, this form being assumed. Then let him pronounce aloud, with a firm and solemn voice, a convenient and potent oration and exorcism of the spirit unto visible appearance.

At the conclusion of this exorcism, taking the covered sigil in his left hand, let him smite it thrice with the flat blade of the magic sword. Then let him raise on high his arms to their utmost stretch, holding in his left hand the veiled sigil, and in his right the sword of art erect, at the same time stamping thrice upon the ground with his right foot.

K—The veiled and corded sigil is then to be placed in the northern part of the hall at the edge of the circle, and the magician employs the oration of the Hierophant, from the throne of the east, modifying it slightly, as follows: “The voice of the exorcism said unto me, ‘Let me shroud myself in darkness, peradventure thus may I manifest myself in light,’” etc. The magician then proclaims aloud that the mystic circumambulation will take place.

L—The magician takes up the sigil in his left hand and circumambulates the magic circle once, then passes to the south and halts. He stands (having placed the sigil on the ground) between it and the west, and repeats the oration of the Kerux, and again consecrates it with water and fire. Then takes it in his hand, facing westward, saying, “Creature of ... twice consecrate, thou mayest approach the gate of the west.”

M—The magician now moves to the west of the magical circle, holds the sigil in his left hand and the sword in his right, faces southwest, and again astrally masks himself with the form of the spirit, and for the first time partially opens the covering of the sigil, without however entirely removing it. He then smites it once with the flat blade of the sword, saying, in a loud, clear, and firm voice: “Thou canst not pass from concealment unto manifestation, save by the virtue of the name Elohim. Before all things are the chaos and the darkness, and the gates of the land of night. I am he whose name is darkness. I am the great one of the path of the shades. I am the exorcist in the midst of the exorcism. Appear thou therefore without fear before me, so pass thou on.” He then reveals the sigil.

N—Take the sigil to the north, circumambulating first, halt, place sigil on the ground, stand between it and the east, repeat the oration of the Kerux, again consecrate with fire and water. Then take it up, face north, and say “Creature of ... , thrice consecrate, thou mayest approach the gate of the east.”

O—Repeat Section M in northeast. Magician then passes to east, takes up sigil in left and sword in right hand. Assumes the mask of the spirit form, smites the sigil with the lotus wand or sword, and says, “Thou canst not pass from concealment unto manifestation save by virtue of the name YHVH. After the formless and the void and the darkness, then cometh the knowledge of the light. I am that light which riseth in the darkness. I am the exorcist in the midst of the exorcism. Appear thou therefore in visible form before me, for I am the wielder of the forces of the balance. Thou hast known me now, so pass thou on to the cubical altar of the universe!”

P—He then recovers sigil and passes to altar, laying it thereon as before shown. He then passes to the east of the altar, holding the sigil and sword as already explained. Then doth he rehearse a most potent conjuration and invocation of the spirit unto visible appearance, using and reiterating all the divine, angelic, and magical names appropriate to this end, neither omitting the signs, seals, sigils, lineal figures, signatures, and the like from that conjuration.

Q—The magician now elevates the covered sigil towards heaven, removes the Veil entirely, leaving it yet corded, crying with a loud voice, “Creature of ... , long hast thou dwelt in darkness. Quit the night and seek the day.” He then replaces it upon the altar, holds the magical sword erect above it, the pommel immediately above the centre thereof, and says, “By all the names, powers, and rites already rehearsed, I conjure thee thus unto visible appearance.” Then the mystic words.

R—Saith the magician, “As light hidden in the darkness can manifest therefrom, so shalt thou become manifest from concealment unto manifestation.”

He then takes up the sigil, stands to east of altar, and faces west. He shall then rehearse a long conjuration to the powers and spirits immediately superior unto that one which he seeks to invoke, that they shall force him to manifest himself unto visible appearance.

He then places the sigil between the pillars, himself at the east facing west, then in the Sign of the Enterer doth he direct the whole current of his will upon the sigil. Thus he continueth until such time as he shall perceive his will power to be weakening, when he protects himself from the reflex of the current by the Sign of Silence, and drops his hands. He now looks towards the quarter that the spirit is to appear in, and he should now see the first signs of his visible manifestation. If he be not thus faintly visible, let the magician repeat the conjuration of the superiors of the spirit, from the place of the throne in the east. And this conjuration may be repeated thrice, each time ending with a new projection of will in the Sign of the Enterer, etc. But if at the third time of repetition he appeareth not, then be it known that there is an error in the working.

So let the master of evocations replace the sigil upon the altar, holding the sword as usual: and thus doing, let him address a humble prayer unto the great gods of heaven to grant unto him the force necessary to correctly complete that evocation. He is then to take back the sigil to between the pillars, and repeat the former processes, when assuredly that spirit will begin to manifest, but in a misty and ill-defined form.

(But if, as is probable, the operator be naturally inclined unto evocation, then might that spirit perchance manifest earlier in the ceremony than this. Still, the ceremony is to be performed up to this point, whether he be there or no.)

Now as soon as the magician shall see the visible manifestation of that spirit's presence, he shall quit the station of the Hierophant and consecrate afresh with water and with fire the sigil of the evoked spirit.

S—Now doth the master of evocations remove from the sigil the restricting cord, and holding the freed sigil in his left hand, he smites it with the flat blade of his sword, exclaiming, “By and in the names of ... I do invoke upon thee the power of perfect manifestation unto visible appearance.” He then circumambulates the circle thrice holding the sigil in his right hand.

T—The magician, standing in the place of the Hierophant, but turning towards the place of the spirit, and fixing his attention thereon, now reads a potent invocation of the spirit unto visible appearance, having previously placed the sigil on the ground, within the circle, at the quarter where the spirit appears.

This invocation should be of some length; and should rehearse and reiterate the divine and other names consonant with the working.

That spirit should now become fully and clearly visible, and should be able to speak with a direct voice, if consonant with his nature. The magician then proclaims aloud that the spirit N. hath been duly and properly evoked in accordance with the sacred rites.

U—The magician now addresses an invocation unto the lords of the plane of the spirit to compel him to perform that which the magician shall demand of him.

V—The magician carefully formulates his demands, questions, etc., and writes down any of the answers that may be advisable. The master of evocations now addresses a conjuration unto the spirit evoked, binding him to hurt or injure naught connected with him, or his assistants, or the place. And that he deceive in nothing, and that he fail not to perform that which he hath been commanded.

W—He then dismisses that spirit by any suitable form, such as those used in the higher grades of the Outer. And if he will not go, then shall the magician compel him by forces contrary to his nature. But he must allow a few minutes for the spirit to dematerialize the body in which he hath manifested, for he will become less and less material by degrees. And note well that the magician (or his companions if he have any) shall never quit the circle during the process of evocation, or afterwards, till the spirit hath quite vanished.

Seeing that in some cases, and with some constitutions, there may be danger arising from the astral conditions, and currents established, and without the actual intention of the spirit to harm, although if of a low nature, he would probably endeavour to do so. Therefore, before the commencement of the evocation, let the operator assure himself that everything which may be necessary, be properly arranged within the circle.

But if it be actually necessary to interrupt the process, then let him stop at that point, veil and re-cord the sigil if it have been unbound or uncovered, recite a license to depart or a banishing formula, and perform the lesser banishing rituals both of the pentagram and hexagram. Thus only may he in comparative safety quit the circle.³¹

II. ▯

CONSECRATION OF TALISMANS

A—The place where the operation is done.

B—The magical operator.

C—The forces of nature employed and attracted.

D—The telesma or material basis.

E—In telemata, the selection of the matter to form the telesma; the preparation and arrangement of the place. The drawing and forming of the body of the telesma. In natural phenomena the preparation of the operation; the formation of the circle, and the selection of the material basis, such as a piece of earth, a cup of water, a flame of fire, a pentacle, or the like.

F—The invocation of the highest divine forces, winding a black cord round the telesma or material basis, covering the same with a black veil, and initiating the blind force therein. Naming aloud the nature of the telesma or operation.

G—The telesma or material basis is now placed towards the west, and duly consecrated with water and fire. The purpose of the operation and the effect intended to be produced is then to be rehearsed in a loud and clear voice.

H—Placing the talisman or material basis at the foot of the altar, state aloud the object to be attained, solemnly asserting that it will be attained, and the reason thereof.

I—Announcement aloud that all is prepared and in readiness, either for charging the telesma or for the commencement of the operation to induce the natural phenomenon. Place a good telesma or material basis within the white triangle on the altar. Place bad to the west of same, holding the sword erect in the right hand for a good purpose, or its point upon the centre of the triangle for evil.

J—Now follow the performance of an invocation to attract the desired spirit to the telesma or material basis, describing in the air above it the lineal figures and sigils, etc., with the appropriate instrument. Then, taking up the telesma in the left hand, let him smite it thrice with the flat of the blade of the sword of art. Then raise it in the left hand (holding erect and aloft the sword in the right hand, stamping thrice upon the earth with the right foot).

K—The talisman or material basis is to be placed towards the north, and the operator repeats the oration of the Hierophant to the candidate. “The voice of the exorcism said unto me, ‘Let me shroud myself in darkness, peradventure thus shall I manifest myself in light. I am the only being in an abyss of darkness. From the darkness came I forth ere my birth, from the silence of a primal sleep.’ And the voice of ages answered unto my soul, creature of talismans, the light shineth in the darkness, but the darkness comprehendeth it not. Let the mystic circumambulation take place in the path of darkness with the symbolic light of occult science to lead the way.”

L—Then, taking up the light (not from the altar) in right hand, circumambulate. Now take up telesma or material basis, carry it round the circle, place it on the ground due south, then bar it, purify and consecrate with water and fire afresh, lift it with left hand, turn, and facing west, say, “Creature of talismans, twice consecrate, thou mayest approach the gate of the west.”

M—He now passes to the west with telesma in left hand, faces southeast, partly unveils telesma, smites it once with the flat blade of the sword, and pronounces, “Thou canst not pass from concealment unto manifestation, save by virtue of the name Elohim. Before all things are the chaos and the darkness, and the gates of the land of night. I am he whose name is darkness. I am the great one of the paths of the shades. I am the exorcist in the midst of the exorcism. Take on therefore manifestation without fear before me, for I am he in whom fear is not. Thou hast known me so pass thou on.” This being done, he replaces the Veil.

N—Then pass round the circle with telesma, halt due north, place talisman on ground, bar, purify, and consecrate again with water and with fire, and say, “Creature of talismans, thrice consecrate, thou mayest approach the gate of the east.” (Hold talisman aloft.)

O—Hold telesma in left hand, lotus wand in right, assume Hierophant’s form. Partly unveil talisman, smite with flat of sword, and say, “Thou canst not pass from concealment unto manifestation save by virtue of the name YHVH. After the formless and the void and the darkness, then cometh the knowledge of the light. I am that light which riseth in darkness. I am the exorcist in the midst of the exorcism. Take on therefore manifestation before me, for I am the wielder of the forces of the balance. Thou hast known me now so pass thou on unto the cubical altar of the universe.”

P—He then recovers talisman or material basis, passes on to the altar, laying it thereon as before shewn. He then passes to east of altar, holds left hand over talisman, and sword over it erect. Then doth he rehearse a most potent conjuration and invocation of that spirit to render irresistible this telesma or material basis, or to render manifest this natural phenomenon of ... , using and reiterating all the divine, angelic, and magical names appropriate to this end, neither omitting the signs, seals, sigils, lineal figures, signatures, and the like from that conjuration.

Q—The magician now elevates the covered telesma or material basis towards heaven, then removes the Veil entirely, yet leaving it corded, crying with a loud voice. “Creature of talismans, (or material basis), long hast thou dwelt in darkness. Quit the night and seek the day.”

He then replaces it on the altar, holds the magical sword erect above it, the pommel immediately above the centre thereof, and says, “By all the names, powers, and rites already rehearsed, I conjure upon thee power and might irresistible.” Then say the mystic words, Khabs am pekht, etc.

R—Saith the magician, “As the light hidden in darkness can manifest therefrom, so shalt thou become irresistible.” He then takes up the telesma or the material basis, stands to east of the altar, and faces west. Then shall he rehearse a long conjuration to the powers and spirits immediately superior unto that one which he seeks to invoke, to make the telesma powerful. Then he places the talisman or material basis between the pillars, himself at the east, facing west, then in the Sign of the Enterer, doth he project the whole current of his will upon the talisman. Thus he continueth until such time as he shall perceive his will power weakening, when he protects himself by the Sign of Silence, and then drops his hands. He now looks towards the talisman, and a flashing light or glory should be seen playing and flickering on the talisman or material basis, and in natural phenomena a slight commencement of the phenomenon should be waited for. If this does not occur, let the magician repeat the conjuration of the superiors from the place of the throne of the east.

And this conjuration may be repeated thrice, each time ending with a new projection of will in the Sign of the Enterer, etc. But if at the third time of repetition the talisman or material basis does not flash, then be it known that there is an error in the working. So let the master of evocations replace the talisman or material basis upon the altar holding the sword as usual, and thus doing, let him address a humble prayer unto the great gods of heaven to grant unto him the force necessary to correctly complete the work. He is then to take back the talisman to between the pillars, and repeat the former process, when assuredly the light will flash.

Now as soon as the magician shall see the light, he shall quit the station of the Hierophant and consecrate afresh with water and with fire.

S—This being done, let the talisman or material basis have the cord removed and smite it with the sword and proclaim “By and in the Names of ... , I invoke upon thee the power of” He then circumambulates thrice, holding the talisman or material basis in his right hand.

T—Then the magician, standing in the place of the Hierophant, but fixing his gaze upon the talisman or material basis which should be placed on the ground within the circle, should now read a potent invocation of some length, rehearsing and reiterating the divine and other names consonant with the working. The talisman should now flash visibly, or the natural phenomenon should definitely commence.

Then let the magician proclaim aloud that the talisman has been duly and properly charged, or the natural phenomenon induced.

U—The magician now addresses an invocation unto the lords of the plane of the spirit to compel him to perform that which the magician requires.

V—The operator now carefully formulates his demands, stating clearly what the talisman is intended to do, or what natural phenomenon he seeks to produce.

W—The master of evocations now addresses a conjuration unto the spirit, binding him to hurt or injure naught connected with him, or his assistants, or the place. He then dismisses the spirits in the name of Jehovashah and Jeheshua, but wraps up talisman first, and no banishing ritual shall be performed, so as not to discharge it, and in the case of natural phenomena it will usually be best to state what duration is required. And the material basis should be preserved wrapped in white linen or silk all the time that the phenomenon is intended to act.

And when it is time for it to cease, the material basis—if water, is to be poured away; if earth, ground to powder and scattered abroad; if a hard substance as a metal, it must be decharged, banished, and thrown aside; if a flame of fire, it shall be extinguished; or if a vial containing air, it shall be opened, and after that well rinsed out with pure water.

III. ☛

☛—INVISIBILITY

A—The shroud of concealment.

B—The magician.

C—The guards of concealment.

D—The Astral Light to be moulded into the shroud.

E—The equation of the symbols in the sphere of sensation.

F—The invocation of the higher; the placing of a barrier without the astral form; the clothing of the same with obscurity through the proper invocation.

G—Formulating clearly the idea of becoming invisible. The formulating of the exact distance at which the shroud should surround the physical body. The consecration with water and fire, so that their vapour may begin to form a basis for the shroud.

H—The beginning to formulate mentally a shroud of concealment about the operator. The affirmation aloud of the reason and object of the working.

I—Announcement that all is ready for the commencement of the operation. Operator stands in the place of the Hierophant at this stage, placing his left hand in the centre of the white triangle and holding in his right the lotus wand by the black end, in readiness to concentrate around him the shroud of darkness and mystery.³²

J—The operator now recites an exorcism of a shroud of darkness to surround him and render him invisible, and, holding the wand by the black end, let him, turning round thrice completely, formulate a triple circle around him, saying, “In the name of the Lord of the Universe, etc., I conjure thee, O shroud of darkness and of mystery, that thou encirclest me so that I may become invisible, so that seeing me, men see me not, neither understand, but that they may see the thing that they see not, and comprehend not the thing that they behold! So mote it be.”

K—Now move to the north, face east, and say, “I have set my feet in the north, and have said, ‘I will shroud myself in mystery and concealment.’” Then repeat the oration, “The voice of my higher soul,” etc., and then command the mystic circumambulation.

L—Move round as usual to the south. Halt, formulating thyself as shrouded in darkness, on the right hand the pillar of fire, and on the left the pillar of cloud, but reaching from darkness to the glory of the heavens.

M—Now move from between the pillars thou hast formulated to the west, face west, and say, “Invisible I cannot pass by the gate of the invisible save by the virtue of the name of darkness.” Then formulating forcibly about thee the shroud of darkness, say, “Darkness is my name, and concealment. I am the great one invisible of the paths of the shades. I am without fear, though veiled in darkness, for within me, though unseen, is the magic of light.”

N—Repeat process in L.

O—Repeat process in M but say, “I am light shrouded in darkness. I am the wielder of the forces of the balance.”

P—Now, concentrating mentally about thee the shroud of concealment, pass to the west of the altar in the place of the Neophyte, face east, remain standing, and rehearse a conjuration by suitable names for the formulating of a shroud of invisibility around and about thee.

Q—Now address the shroud of darkness, thus: “Shroud of concealment. Long hast thou dwelt concealed. Quit the light, that thou mayest conceal me before men.” Then carefully formulate the shroud of concealment around thee and say, “I receive thee as a covering and as a guard.” Then the mystic words.

R—Still formulating the shroud, say, “Before all magical manifestation cometh the knowledge of the hidden light.” Then move to the pillars and give the signs and steps, words, etc. With the Sign of the Enterer, project now thy whole will in one great effort to realize thyself actually fading out, and becoming invisible to mortal eyes; and in doing this must thou obtain the effect of thy physical body actually gradually becoming partially invisible to thy natural eyes, as though a veil or cloud were formulating between it and thee (and be very careful not to lose thy self-control at this point). But also at this point is there a certain divine exstasis and an exaltation desirable, for herein is a sensation of an exalted strength.

S—Again formulate the shroud as concealing thee and enveloping thee, and thus wrapped up therein, circumambulate the circle thrice.

T—Intensely formulating the shroud, stand at the east and proclaim, “Thus have I formulated unto myself a shroud of darkness and of mystery, as a concealment and guard.”

U—Now rehearse an invocation of all the divine names of Binah, that thou mayest retain the shroud of darkness under thy own proper control and guidance.

V—State clearly to the shroud what it is thy desire to perform therewith.

W—Having obtained the desired effect, and gone about invisible, it is required that thou shouldst conjure the powers of the light to act against that shroud of darkness and mystery so as to disintegrate it, lest any force seek to use it as a medium for an obsession, etc. Therefore rehearse a conjuration as aforesaid, and then open the shroud and come forth out of the midst thereof, and then disintegrate that shroud, by the use of a conjuration to the forces of Binah to disintegrate and scatter the particles thereof, but affirming that they shall again be readily attracted at thy command.

But on no account must that shroud of awful mystery be left without such disintegration, seeing that it would speedily attract an occupant which would become a terrible vampire preying upon him who had called it into being.

And after frequent rehearsals of this operation, the thing may almost be done “per motem.”³³

▣—TRANSFORMATIONS

A—The astral form.

B—The magician.

C—The forces used to alter the form.

D—The form to be taken.

E—The equation of the symbolism in the sphere of sensation.

F—Invocation of the higher. The definition of the form required as a delineation of blind forces, and the awakening of the same by its proper formulation.

G—Formulating clearly to the mind the form intended to be taken. The restriction and definition of this as a clear form and the actual baptism by water and by fire with the order name of the adept.

H—The actual invocation aloud of the form desired to be assumed to formulate before you, the statement of the desire of the operator and the reason thereof.

I—Announcement aloud that all is now ready for the operation of the transformation of the astral body. The magician mentally places the form as nearly as circumstances permit in the position of the enterer, himself taking the place of the Hierophant, holding his wand by the black portion ready to commence the oration aloud.

J—Let him now repeat a powerful exorcism of the shape into which he desires to transform himself, using the names, etc., belonging to the plane, planet, or other eidolon, most in harmony with the shape desired. Then holding the wand by the black end, and directing the flower over the head of the form, let him say, “In the name of the Lord of the Universe, arise before me, O form of ... , into which I have elected to transform myself. So that seeing me men may see the thing that they see not and comprehend not the thing they behold.”

K—The magician saith, “Pass towards the north, shrouded in darkness, O form of ... into which I have elected to transform myself.” Then let him repeat the usual oration from the throne of the east. Then command the mystic circumambulation.

L—Now bring the form around to the south, arrest it, and formulate it there, standing between two great pillars of fire and cloud. Purify it with water and by fire, by placing these elements on either side of the form.

M—Pass to west, face southeast, formulate the form before thee, this time endeavouring to render it physically visible. Repeat speeches of Hiereus and Hegemon.

N—Same as L

O—Same as M.

P—Pass to the east of altar, formulating the form as near in the position of the Neophyte as may be. Now address a solemn invocation and conjuration by divine, etc. names appropriate to render the form fitting for thy transformation therein.

Q—Remain east of altar, address the form “Child of Earth,” etc., endeavouring now to see it physically. Then at the words, “we receive thee,” etc. he draws the form towards him so as to envelop him, being careful at the same time to invoke the divine light by the rehearsal of the mystic words.

R—Still keeping himself in the form of the magician say, “Before all magical manifestation cometh the knowledge of the divine light.” He then moves to the pillars and gives signs, etc., endeavouring with the whole force of his will to feel himself actually and physically in the shape of the form desired. And at this point he must see as if in a cloudy and misty manner the outline of the form enshrouding him, though not yet completely and wholly visible. When this occurs, but not before, let him formulate himself as standing between the two vast pillars of fire and cloud.

S—He now again endeavours to formulate the form as if visibly enshrouding him; and still, astrally, retaining the form, he thrice circumambulates the place of working.

T—Standing at the east, let him thoroughly formulate the shape, which should now appear manifest, and as if enshrouding him, even to his own vision; and then let him proclaim aloud, “Thus have I formulated unto myself this transformation.”

U—Let him now invoke all the superior names, etc., of the plane appropriate to the form that he may retain it under his proper control and guidance.

V—He states clearly to the form what he intends to do with it.

W—Similar to the W section of Invisibility, save that the conjurations, etc., are to be made to the appropriate plane of the form instead of to Binah.

☞—SPIRITUAL DEVELOPMENT

A—The sphere of sensation.

B—The Augoeides.

C—The Sephiroth, etc. employed.

D—The aspirant, or natural man.

E—The equilibration of the symbols.

F—The invocation of the higher. The limiting and controlling of the lower and the closing of the material senses, to awaken the spiritual.

G—Attempting to make the natural man grasp the higher by first limiting the extent to which mere intellect can help him herein; then by purification of his thoughts and desires. In doing this let him formulate himself as standing between the pillars of fire and cloud.

H—The aspiration of the whole natural man towards the higher self, and a prayer for light and guidance through his higher self, addressed to the Lord of the Universe.

I—The aspirant affirms aloud his earnest prayer to obtain divine guidance, kneels at the west of the altar; in the position of the candidate in the enterer, and at the same time astrally projects his consciousness to the east of the altar, and turns, facing his body to the west, holding astrally his own left hand with his astral left. And he raises his astral right hand holding the presentment of his lotus wand by the white portion thereof, and raised in the air erect.

J—Let the aspirant now slowly recite an oration unto the gods and unto the higher self (as that of the Second Adept in the entering of the vault), but as if with his astral consciousness, which is projected to the east of the altar.³⁴

Now let the aspirant, concentrating all his intelligence in his body, lay the blade of his sword thrice on the Daath point of his neck, and pronounce with his whole will, the words “So help me, the Lord of the Universe and my own higher soul.”

Let him then rise, facing east, and stand for a few moments in silence, raising his left hand open, and his right holding the sword of art, to their full length above his head; his head thrown back, his eyes lifted upwards. Thus standing let him aspire with his whole will towards his best and highest ideal of the divine.

K—Then let the aspirant pass unto the north, and facing east solemnly repeat the oration of the Hierophant, as before endeavouring to project the speaking conscious self to the place of the Hierophant (in this case to the throne of the east.) Then let him slowly mentally formulate before him the eidolon of a great angel torchbearer, standing before him as if to lead and light the way.

L—Following it, let the aspirant circumambulate and pass to south, then let him halt and aspire with his whole will, first to the mercy side of the divine ideal, and then to the severity thereof. And then let him imagine himself as standing between two great pillars of fire and cloud, whose bases indeed are buried in black ever rolling clouds of darkness, which symbolizes the chaos of the world of Assiah, but whose summits are lost in glorious light undying, penetrating unto the white glory of the throne of the Ancient of Days.

M—Now doth the aspirant move unto the west, faces southeast, and repeats alike the speeches of Hiereus and Hegemon.

N—After another circumambulation, the adept aspirant halts at the south and repeats the meditation in L.

O—And so he passes unto the east, and repeats alike the words of the Hierophant and the Hegemon.

P—And so let him pass to the west of the altar, ever led by the angel torchbearer. And he projects his astral, and he implants therein his consciousness, and his body kneels what time his soul passes between the pillars. And he prayeth the great prayer of the Hierophant.

Q—And now doth the aspirant's soul re-enter unto his gross-form; and he dreams in divine exstasis of the glory ineffable which is in the bornless beyond; and so meditating doth he arise, and lifts to the heavens, his hands, and his eyes, and his hopes, and concentrating his will on the glory, low murmurs he the mystic words of power.

R—So also doth he presently repeat the words of the Hierophant concerning the lamp of the Kerux, and so also passeth he by the east of the altar unto between the pillars; and standing between them (or formulating them if they be not there as it appears unto him) so raises he his heart unto the highest faith, and so he meditates upon the highest Godhead he can dream of. Then let him grope with his hands in the darkness of his ignorance, and in the enterer sign invoke the power that it remove the darkness from his spiritual vision. So let him then endeavour to behold before him in the place of the throne of the east, a certain light or dim glory, which shapeth itself into a form.³⁵

Then let him withdraw awhile from such contemplation and formulate for his equilibration once more the pillars of the temple of heaven.

S—And so again doth he aspire to see the glory conforming—and when this is accomplished, he thrice circumambulates, reverently saluting with the Sign of the Enterer the place of glory.

T—Now let the aspirant stand opposite unto the place of that light, and let him make deep meditation and contemplation thereon. Presently also imagining it to enshroud and envelope him, and again endeavouring to identify himself with its glory. So let him exalt himself in the likeness or eidolon of a colossal being, and endeavour to realize that this is the only true self, and that the natural man is as it were the base and throne thereof, and let him do this with due and meet reverence and awe.

And therefore he shall presently proclaim aloud “Thus at length have I been permitted to begin to comprehend the form of my higher self.”

U—Now doth the aspirant make entreaty of that Augoeides to render comprehensible what things may be necessary for his instruction and comprehension.

V—And he consults it in any matter he may have especially sought for guidance from the beyond.

W—And lastly, let the aspirant endeavour to formulate a link between the glory and his selfhood; and let him renew his obligation of purity of mind before it, avoiding in this any tendency to fanaticism or spiritual pride.³⁶

IV. 1

DIVINATION

A—The form of divination.

B—The diviner.

C—The forces acting in the divination.

D—The subject of the divination.

E—The preparation of all things necessary, and the right understanding of the process so as to formulate a connecting link between the process employed and the macrocosm.

F—The invocation of the higher; arrangement of the scheme of divination and initiation of the forces thereof.

G—The first entry into the matter. First assertion of limits and correspondences: beginning of the working.

H—The actual and careful formulation of the question demanded; and consideration of all its correspondences and their classifications.

I—Announcement aloud that all the correspondences taken are correct and perfect; the diviner places his hand upon the instrument of divination; standing at the east of the altar, he prepares to invoke the forces required in the divination.

J—Solemn invocation of the necessary spiritual forces to aid the diviner in the divination. Then let him say, “Arise before me clear as a mirror, O magical vision requisite for the accomplishment of this divination.”

K—Accurately define the term of the question; putting down clearly in writing what is already known, what is suspected or implied, and what is sought to be known. And see that thou verify in the beginning of the judgment that part which is already known.

L—Next let the diviner formulate clearly under two groups or heads (a) the arguments for, (b) the arguments against, the success of the subject of one divination, so as to be able to draw a preliminary conclusion therefrom on either side.

M—First formulation of a conclusive judgment from the premises already obtained.

N—Same as section L.

O—Formulation of a second judgment, this time of the further developments arising from those indicated in the previous process of judgment, which was a preliminary to this operation.

P—The comparison of the first preliminary judgment with one second judgment developing therefrom, so as to enable the diviner to form an idea of the probable action of forces beyond the actual plane, by the invocation of an angelic figure consonant to the process. And in this matter take care not to mislead thy judgment through the action of thine own preconceived ideas; but only relying, after due tests, on the indication afforded thee by the angelic form. And know, unless the form be of an angelic nature, its indication will not be reliable, seeing that if it be an elemental, it will be below the plane desired.

Q—The diviner now completely and thoroughly formulates his whole judgment as well for the immediate future as for the development thereof, taking into account the knowledge and indications given him by the angelic form.

R—Having this result before him, let the diviner now formulate a fresh divination process, based on the conclusions at which he has arrived, so as to form a basis for a further working.

S—Formulates the sides for and against for a fresh judgment, and deduces conclusion from fresh operation.

T—The diviner then compares carefully the whole judgment and decisions arrived at with their conclusions, and delivers now plainly a succinct and consecutive judgment thereon.

U—The diviner gives advice to the consultant as to what use he shall make of the judgment.

V—The diviner formulates clearly with what forces it may be necessary to work in order to combat the evil, or fix the good, promised by the divination.

W—Lastly, remember that unto thee a divination shall be as a sacred work of the divine magic of light, and not to be performed to pander unto thy curiosity regarding the secrets of another, and if by this means thou shalt arrive at a knowledge of another's secrets, thou shalt respect and not betray them.

V. ☐

ALCHEMY

A—The curcumbite or the alembic.

B—The alchemist.

C—The processes and forces employed.

D—The matter to be transmuted.

E—The selection of the matter to be transmuted, and the formation, cleansing, and disposing of all the necessary vessels, materials, etc., for the working of the process.

F—General invocation of the higher forces to action. Placing of the matter within the curcubite or philosophic egg, and invocation of a blind force to action therein, in darkness and silence.

G—The beginning of the actual process. The regulation and restriction of the proper degree of heat and moisture to be employed in the working. First evocation followed by first distillation.

H—The taking up of the residuum which remaineth after the distillation from the curcubite or alembic; the grinding thereof to form a powder in a mortar. This powder is then to be placed again in the curcubite. The fluid already distilled is to be poured again upon it. The curcubite or philosophic egg is to be closed.

I—The curcubite or egg philosophic being hermetically sealed, the alchemist announces aloud that all is prepared for the invocation of the forces necessary to accomplish the work. The matter is then to be placed upon an altar with the elements and four weapons thereon; upon the white triangle and upon a flashing tablet of a general nature, in harmony with the matter selected for the working. Standing now in the place of the Hierophant at the east of the altar, the alchemist should place his left hand upon the top of the curcubite, raise his right hand holding the lotus wand by the Aries band (for in Aries is the beginning of the life of the year), ready to commence the general invocation of the forces of the divine light to operate in the work.

J—The pronouncing aloud of the invocation of the requisite general forces, answering to the class of alchemical work to be performed. The conjuring of the necessary forces to act in the curcubite for the work required. The tracing in the air above it with appropriate weapon the necessary lineal figures, signs, sigils, and the like. Then let the alchemist say: “So help me the Lord of the Universe and my own higher soul.” Then let him raise the curcubite in the air with both hands, saying: “Arise herein to action, O ye forces of the light divine.”

K—Now let the matter putrefy in the balneum Mariae³⁷ in a very gentle heat, until darkness beginneth to supervene; and even until it becometh entirely black. If from its nature the mixture will not admit of entire blackness, examine it astrally till there is the astral appearance of the thickest possible darkness, and thou mayest also evoke an elemental form to tell thee if the blackness be sufficient. But be thou sure that in this latter thou art not deceived, seeing that the nature of such an elemental will be deceptive from the nature of the symbol of darkness, wherefore ask thou of him nothing further concerning the working at this stage but only concerning the blackness, and this can be further tested by the elemental itself, which should be either black or clad in an intensely black robe.³⁸

When the mixture be sufficiently black, then take the curcubite out of the balneum Mariae and place it to the north of the altar and perform over it a solemn invocation of the forces of Saturn to act therein; holding the wand by the black band, then say: “The voice of the alchemist” etc. The curcubite is then to be unstopped and the alembic head fitted on for purposes of distillation.³⁹

L—Then let the alchemist distil with a gentle heat until nothing remaineth to come over. Let him then take out the residuum and grind it into a powder; replace this powder in the curcubite, and pour again upon it the fluid previously distilled.

The curcubite is then to be placed again in a balneum Mariae in a gentle heat. When it seems fairly re-dissolved (irrespective of colour) let it be taken out of the bath. It is now to undergo another magical ceremony.

M—Now place the curcubite to the west of the altar, holding the lotus wand by the black end, perform a magical invocation of the moon in her decrease and of Cauda Draconis. The curcubite is then to be exposed to the moonlight

(she being in her decrease) for nine consecutive nights, commencing at full moon. The alembic head is then to be fitted on.

N—Repeat process set forth in section L.

O—The curcubite is to be placed to the east of the altar, and the alchemist performs an invocation of the moon in her increase, and of Caput Draconis (holding lotus wand by white end) to act upon the matter. The curcubite is now to be exposed for nine consecutive nights (ending with the full moon) to the moon's rays. (In this, as in all similar exposures, it matters not if such nights be overclouded, so long as the vessel be placed in such a position as to receive the direct rays did the cloud withdraw.)

P—The curcubite is again to be placed on the white triangle upon the altar. The alchemist performs an invocation of the forces of the sun to act in the curcubite. It is then to be exposed to the rays of the sun for twelve hours each day; from 8:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. (This should be done preferably when the sun is strongly posited in the zodiac, but it can be done at some other times, though never when it is in Scorpio, Libra, Capricornus, or Aquarius).

Q—The curcubite is again placed upon the white triangle upon the altar. The alchemist repeats the words: "Child of Earth, long hast thou dwelt," etc. Then holding above it the lotus wand by the white end, he says: "I formulate in thee the invoked forces of light," and repeats the mystic words. At this point keen and bright flashes of light should appear in the curcubite, and the mixture itself (as far as its nature will permit) should be clear. Now invoke an elemental from the curcubite consonant to the nature of the mixture, and judge by the nature of the colour of its robes and their brilliancy whether the matter has attained to the right condition. But if the flashes do not appear, and if the robes of the elemental be not brilliant and flashing, then let the curcubite stand within the white triangle for seven days; having on the right hand of the apex of the triangle a flashing tablet of the sun, and in the left one of the moon. Let it not be moved or disturbed all those seven days; but not in the dark, save at night. Then let the operation as aforementioned be repeated over the curcubite, and this process may be repeated altogether three times if the flashing light cometh not. For without this latter the work would be useless. But if after three repetitions it still appear not, it is a sign that there hath been an error in the working, such being either in the disposition of the alchemist or in the management of the curcubite. Wherefore let the lunar and the solar invocations and exposures be repeated, when without doubt, if these be done with care (and more especially those of Caput Draconis and Cauda Draconis with those of the moon as taught, for these have great force materially) then without doubt shall that flashing light manifest itself in the curcubite.

R—Holding the lotus wand by the white end, the alchemist now draws over the curcubite the symbol of the flaming sword as if descending into the mixture. Then let him place the curcubite to the east of the altar. The alchemist stands between the pillars and performs a solemn invocation of the forces of Mars to act therein. The curcubite is then to be placed between the pillars (or the drawn symbols of these same) for seven days, upon a flashing tablet of Mars. After this period, fit on the alembic head, and distil first in balneum Mariae, then in balneum arenae ⁴⁰ till what time the mixture be all distilled over.

S—Now let the alchemist take the fluid of the distillate and let him perform over it an invocation of the forces of Mercury to act in the clear fluid, so as to formulate therein the alchemic Mercury, even the Mercury of the philosophers. (The residuum or the dead head is not to be worked with at present, but is to be set apart for future use.) After the invocation of the alchemic Mercury a certain brilliance should manifest itself in the whole fluid, that is to say, it should not only be clear, but also brilliant and flashing. Now expose it in an hermetic receiver for seven days to the light of the sun; at the end of which time there should be distinct flashes of light therein. (Or an egg philosophic ⁴¹ may be used; but the receiver of the alembic if close stopped will answer this purpose.)

T—Now the residuum or dead head is to be taken out of the curcubite, ground small and replaced. An invocation of the forces of Jupiter is then to be performed over that powder. It is then to be kept in the dark standing upon a flashing tablet of Jupiter for seven days. At the end of this time there should be a slight flashing about it, but if this come not yet, repeat this operation up to three times, when a faint flashing of light is certain to come.

U—A flashing tablet of each of the four elements is now to be placed upon an altar as shown in the figure, and thereon are also to be placed the magical elemental weapons, as is also clearly indicated. The receiver containing the distillate is now to be placed between the air and water tablets, and the curcubite with the dead head between the fire and earth tablets. Now let the alchemist perform an invocation using especially the Supreme Ritual of the Pentagram, and the lesser magical implement appropriate. First, of the forces of fire to act in the curcubite on the dead head. Second of those of water to act on the distillate. Third, of the forces of the spirit to act in both (using the white end of lotus wand). Fourth, of those of the air to act on the distillate; and lastly, those of the earth to act on the Dead Head. Let the curcubite and the receiver stand thus for five consecutive days, at the end of which time there should be flashes manifest in both mixtures. And these flashes should be lightly coloured.

Alchemical Altar

V—The alchemist, still keeping the vessels in the same relative positions, but removing the tablets of the elements from the altar, then substitutes one of Kether. This must be white with golden charges, and is to be placed on or within the white triangle between the vessels. He then addresses a most solemn invocation to the forces of Kether; to render the result of the working that which he shall desire, and making over each vessel the symbol of the flaming sword.

This is the most important of all the invocations. It will only succeed if the alchemist keepeth himself closely allied unto his higher self during the working of the invocation and of making the tablet. And at the end of it, if it have been successful, a keen and translucent flash will take the place of the slightly coloured flashes in the receiver of the curcubite; so that the fluid should sparkle as a diamond, whilst the powder in the curcubite shall slightly gleam.

W—The distilled liquid is now to be poured from the receiver upon the residuum of the dead head in the curcubite, and the mixture at first will appear cloudy. It is now to be exposed to the sun for ten days consecutively (ten is Tiphareth translating the influence of Kether.) It is then again to be placed upon the white triangle upon the altar, upon a flashing tablet of Venus, with a solemn invocation of Venus to act therein. Let it remain thus for seven days, at the end of which time see what forms and colour and appearance the liquor hath taken, for there should now arise a certain softer flash in the liquid, and an elemental may be evoked to test the condition. When this softer flash is manifest, place the curcumbite into the balneum Mariae to digest with a very gentle heat for seven days.

Place it then in the balneum Mariae to distil, beginning with a gentle, and ending with a strong heat. Distil thus till nothing more will come over, even with a most violent heat. Preserve the fluid in a closely stoppered vial, it is an elixir for use according to the substance from which it was prepared. If from a thing medicinal, a medicine; if from a metal, for the purifying of metals; and herein shalt thou use thy judgment. The residuum thou shalt place without powdering into a crucible, well sealed and luted. And thou shalt place the same in thine Athanor, bringing it first to a red and then to a white heat, and this thou shalt do seven times in seven consecutive days, taking out the crucible each day as soon as thou hast brought it to the highest possible heat, and allowing it to cool gradually.

And the preferable time for this working should be in the heat of the day. On the seventh day of this operation thou shalt open the crucible and thou shalt behold what form and colour thy Caput Mortuum hath taken.

It will be like either a precious stone or a glittering powder. And this stone or powder shall be of Magical Virtue in accordance with its nature.

Finished is that which is written concerning the for mulae of the magic of light.⁴²

Ceremonial Magic

(Rituals Based Upon the of Z.2 in Book Five)

EVOCATION

The temple is arranged as in the Neophyte grade. There is a circle about ten feet in diameter formed by coloured tapes. Pantacles bearing the divine names are placed at the four quarters on the rim of the circle. Adonai Ha-Aretz, Adonai Melekh, and Agla are written in Hebrew lettering; and Emor Dial Hectega in Enochian characters, on the pantacles. About a foot outside the circle and towards the north is a triangle formed by white tapes. The letters of Nephesch Ha-Messiach in Hebrew are written about its angles. In the triangle is a pantacle bearing the sigil of Axir, based upon the letters of the Rose. The same sigil is painted on the back of the Hierophant's lamen worn by the magus, and it is also painted on another pantacle which is carried by the magus, later to be veiled and bound; it is upon this latter that he works.

A heavy-bodied incense should be used, and copiously. Dittany of Crete is probably the best—or any other fairly stable and harmonious incense. When all is ready, announce from the altar, holding the lotus wand:

Hekas, hekas este bebeloi.

Then, taking the sword, perform the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram and Hexagram, closing with the L.V.X. signs.

Pass to the altar without either wand or sword, take up the fire wand, go south, raise fire wand above head, attract the light and circumambulate slowly with the sun, saying:

And when, after all the phantoms have vanished, thou shalt see that holy and formless fire, that fire which darts and flashes through the hidden depths of the universe, hear thou the voice of fire.

On reaching the south, face the quarter, trace fire pentagram, with Leo in centre, and say:

Oip Teaa Pedoce. In the names and letters of the great southern quadrangle, I invoke ye, ye angels of the watchtower of the south.

Replace wand. Take cup to west, sprinkle water, raise cup, circumambulate with Sol, saying:

So therefore first the priest who governeth the works of fire must sprinkle with the lustral water of the loud resounding sea.

On reaching the west, face west, sprinkle water, and make with the cup the pentagram of water with eagle Kerub in centre.

Empeh Arsel Gaiol. In the names and letters of the great western quadrangle, I invoke ye, ye angels of the watchtower of the west.

Replace cup, take dagger, pass to east, face east, and strike air thrice, then circumambulate, saying:

Such a fire existeth, extending through the rushings of air. Or even a fire formless whence cometh the image of a voice. Or even a flashing light, abounding, revolving, whirling forth, crying aloud.

Reaching east, face east, strike air with dagger, and make invoking air pentagram with Aquarius in centre, and say:

Oro Ibah Aozpi. In the names and letters of the great eastern quadrangle, I invoke ye, ye angels of the watchtower of the east.

Replace dagger. Take pantacle, go north, face north, circumambulate, after shaking pantacle thrice. Say:

Stoop not down into the darkly splendid world wherein continually lieth a faithless depth and Hades wrapped in gloom, delighting in unintelligible images, precipitous, winding; a black ever-rolling abyss ever espousing a body unluminous, formless, and void.

Reaching north, shake pantacle, make earth pentagram with Taurus in centre, and say:

Emor Dial Hectega. In the names and letters of the great northern quadrangle, I invoke ye, ye angels of the watchtower of the north.

Replace pantacle. Go west of altar, face east, raise the censer and describe invoking pentagrams of spirit both active and passive, saying:

Exarp. Bitom. Nanta. Hcoma. In the names and letters of the mystical Tablet of Union, I invoke ye, ye divine forces of the spirit of life.

Replace censer. Make the Portal Sign of the Rending of the Veil.

I invoke ye, ye angels of the celestial spheres whose dwelling is in the invisible. Ye are the guardians of the gates of the universe, be ye also the guardians of this mystic sphere. Keep far removed the evil and the unbalanced. Strengthen and inspire me so that I may preserve unsullied this abode of the mysteries of the eternal gods. Let my sphere be pure and holy so that I may enter in and become a partaker of the secrets of the light divine.

Circumambulate three times to draw down the light. Return to altar, face east, and utter the adoration:

Holy art Thou, Lord of the Universe.

Holy art Thou whom nature hath not formed.

Holy art Thou, the vast and the mighty one.

Lord of the light and of the darkness.¹

Pause. Then take up the lotus wand, and pass between the pillars. Make the Zelator sign, and say:

Let us adore the lord and king of earth. Adonai ha-Aretz. Adonai Melekh. Unto Thee (make the Qabalistic cross) be the kingdom, the power, and the glory. Malkuth, Geburah, Gedulah, Amen. (Trace the cross and circle in air with wand.) The rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley. Amen.

Pass round the temple to the earth tablet in the north. Make the invoking pentagrams of spirit, active and passive, and the invoking earth pentagram with Taurus symbol in centre. Say:

And the Elohim said: Let us make Adam in our own image, after our likeness, and let them have dominion over all the earth. In the name of Adonai Melekh, and in the name of the bride and queen of the kingdom, spirits of earth, adore Adonai.

Trace Taurus Kerub in air; also sigil of Auriel.

In the name of Auriel, the great archangel of earth, and by the sign of the head of the ox, spirits of earth, adore Adonai.

Make cross in air.

In the names and letters of the great northern quadrangle, spirits of earth, adore Adonai.

Hold wand on high.

In the three great secret names of God borne upon the Banner of the North, Emor Dial Hectega, and in the name of Ic Zod Heh Chal, great king of the north, spirits of earth, adore Adonai.

Go to east to commence the Supreme Invoking Ritual of the Earth Pentagram, beginning and closing with the Qabalistic cross. Then return to north, and vibrate very powerfully the Enochian key.

Sapah Zimii d u-i-v, od noas ta Qanis Adroch, dorphal caosg od faonts piripsol ta blior. Casarm a-m-ipzi nazarth AF, od dlugar zizop zlida caosgi tol torgi, od z chis e siasch L ta vi-u, od iaod thild ds hubar PEOAL, soba cormfa chis ta la, vls, od q-cocasb. Eca niis od darbs qaas. F etharzi od bliora. Ia-ial ed-nas cicles. Baglé? Ge-iad I L! ²

Go to the south of the altar, and face the north. Draw the Hebrew letters of Adonai Ha-Aretz in the air before you, also the sigil. Then imagine both in the heart. Vibrate the name several times by the vibratory formula of the Middle Pillar until the whole body throbs and pulses with the divine power.

Adonai ha-Aretz. O Thou who art the king of earth, taking the earth for Thy footstool, I invoke Thee and adore Thee. Dwell Thou within my heart, I beseech Thee, to awaken that which shall prove a true channel for the working of Thy divine power. May this ceremony for the evocation of the earth angel Axir which I am about to perform, be a focus for the ray of thy illuminating power. To the end that I may use this consecration to progress further in the Great Work, and thereby help others who may come within my sphere of influence.

Trace the earth pentagram and in it the sigil and Hebrew letters of Auriel. Picture the name in the lungs, and vibrate it several times by the vibratory formula, circulating the force thereafter.

Grant unto me the presence and power of thy archangel Auriel who governeth the spirits of earth, that he may guide me in my quest for the hidden stone.

Trace the sigil and letters of Phorlakh in the air. Then in the heart, and vibrate.

Direct thy angel Phorlakh to watch over my footsteps in this Path of Light. O thou mighty angel of earth, I conjure thee by the divine names that thou permeate my mind now in this temple, to aid me with thy power, that I may truly evoke to visible manifestation the angel Axir of the lesser angle of earth of the northern quadrangle.

Trace the sigil and letters of Kerub and vibrate.

May the ruler of earth, by the permission of Adonai Melekh, extend his power so that, divinely, I may be aided to perform aright this magical evocation and bring it to successful culmination, even as Malkuth is the throne of the ten Sephiroth.

Pause. Contemplate the Kether above the head, and endeavour to bring down its light.

In the names of Sandalphon, Metatron, and Nephesch ha-Messiach, the three Kerubim ruling over Malkuth, and by the power of the choir of angels who art set over the governance of the kingdom, (trace sigils of all these names and vibrate very powerfully), the Aschim, the holy souls of fire, let it be known that I, Ad Majorem Adonai Gloriam,³ Neophyte of the Golden Dawn, and Frater R.R. et A.C., have summoned the powers of earth to my presence. Let there be formed a true and potent link between my human soul on the one hand, and all those divine powers of Malkuth which receive the influx from on high. To this end, I propose to evoke unto physical manifestation the great angel Axir, of the third lesser angle of the watchtower of the north, in the name of Adonai ha-Aretz and by the divine aid of Emor Dial Hectega.

Bind and veil sigil with white cord and black cloth. Place it without the circle at the west, and say:

Hail unto ye, lords of the land of life, hear ye these my words for I am made as ye are, who are the formers of the soul. With the divine aid, I now purpose to call forth this day and hour from the dark depths of my sphere of sensation the angel Axir of the lesser earthy angle of the northern quadrangle, whose magical seal I now bind with this triple cord of bondage, and shroud in the black darkness of concealment. Even as I have bound about this sigil this cord so let Axir be bound in his abode and habitation, that he move not therefrom save to manifest unto the light before me. Even as with this veil of black I shroud the light of day from this sigil, so do I render him in his place, blind and dumb, that he may in no wise move except unto manifestation and appearance before me. And the reason of this my working is to obtain from that angel the true knowledge of earth, how I may securely fix within my being the secret philosophical stone of creation whereon is a hidden name inscribed. To this end, I implore the divine assistance in the names of Adonai ha-Aretz, Auriel, Phorlakh; Emor Dial Hectega, and Ic Zod Heh Chal.

Draw the pantacle into the circle with the point of sword.

Creature of sigils, enter thou within this sacred circle that the angel Axir may pass from concealment unto manifestation.

Consecrate immediately with fire and with water at the west of the circle.

Creature of sigils, purified and made consecrate, enter thou the pathway of evil.

Hold sigil aloft and move in a northeast direction. Stop at the northeast of altar, strike sigil with flat of sword, saying:

The great angel Samael spake and said: I am the prince of darkness and of night. The foolish and rebellious gaze upon the face of the created world, finding therein naught but terror and obscurity. To them it is the terror of darkness, and they are but as drunken men stumbling in the darkness. Return, thou creature of sigils; not as yet canst thou pass by.

Return to west, then move southeast. Strike sigil as before.

The great angel Metatron spake and said: I am the angel of the presence divine. The wise gaze upon the created world and behold therein the dazzling image of the Creator. O creature of sigils, not as yet canst thine eyes behold that dazzling image of Adonai. Return. Thou canst not pass by.

Return with sigil to west, and this time go straight forward to the altar. Smite upraised sigil with the flat of sword.

The great angel Sandalphon spake and said: I am the reconciler for earth, and the celestial soul therein. Form is invisible alike in darkness and in blinding light. I am the angel of Paphro Osoronophris—and I prepare the way to manifestation unto the light. Prepare thou, therefore, to manifest thyself unto visible appearance.

Place sigil at foot of altar, and say:

O thou mighty and powerful angel Axir, I bind and conjure thee in the name of Sandalphon who thus prepares the way for thee, that thou appear in visible form before me in the triangle without this circle of art. In the name of Emor Dial Hectega, I command that thou shalt speedily come hither from thy darkened abodes in the land of Ophir, to appear before me in a physical form. And I further command, by all the names divine, that thou teach me how best the great creative work may be pursued, and how I may find the hidden stone of the wise whereby I may fix within a purified body my higher self. And, in this hall of the dual manifestation of truth, in the presence of Adonai ha-Aretz and all the powers of Malkuth, I invoke and charge thee, that even as within me is concealed the knowledge of the magic of the light divine, so shalt thou pass from concealment unto manifestation visibly in this triangle placed without this circle of art.

Place sigil on altar on the white triangle. Stand east of altar, face west, place left hand on sigil, hold sword aloft, and over it trace appropriate sigils of the names as they are rehearsed.

O invisible king, who taking the earth for foundation, didst hollow its depth to fill them with Thy almighty power. Thou whose name shaketh the arches of the world, Thou who causest the seven metals to flow in the veins of the rocks, king of the seven lights, rewarder of the subterranean workers, lead us into the desirable air and into the realm of splendour. We watch and we labour unceasingly. We seek and we hope, by the twelve stones of the holy city, by the buried talismans, by the axis of the lodestone which passes through the centre of the earth. Adonai. Adonai. Adonai. (Vibrate by formula of the Middle Pillar and circumambulate it.) Have pity upon those who suffer, expand our hearts, unbind and upraise our minds, enlarge our natures!

O stability and motion! O darkness veiled in brilliance! O day clothed in night! O master who never dost withhold the wages of Thy workmen! O silver whiteness! O golden splendour! O crown of living and harmonious diamond! Thou who wearest the heavens on Thy finger like a ring of sapphire! Thou who hidest beneath the earth in the kingdom of gems, the marvellous seed of the stars. Live, reign, and be Thou the eternal dispenser of the treasures whereof Thou hast made us the wardens.

Trace invoking earth pentagram over sigil, and say:

In the three great secret holy names of God borne upon the Banner of the North, Emor Dial Hectega (vibrate by the Middle Pillar and circumambulate), I invoke thee, thou great king of the north, Ic Zod Heh Chal (trace a whirl with sword over sigil) to be present here by me this day, and to grant thy protection and power unto me, to enable me to evoke Axir, an angel subservient to the lesser angle of earth of the northern quadrangle, unto visible manifestation.

*Trace Saturn hexagram over sigil, but using the Taurus symbol of the Kerub.*⁴

I invoke ye, ye great princes of the northern quadrangle, who are known by the title and honourable office of seniors. Hear ye my petition, ye celestial seniors who rule over the earth in the north quadrangle, and who bear the names of Laidrom, Alhectega, Aczinor, Ahmbicv, Lzinopo, Liansa. Be this day present with me, so that the angel Axir may be caused to manifest physically unto me in this temple, to the end that he may teach me the creative art, and how I may divinely fix the higher self within a purified body, and how I may find the hidden stone of the philosophers, that stone whereon is a new name written.

O thou angel, Axir, subservient in the lesser angle of earth, in the great northern quadrangle, I do invoke and conjure thee, being armed with divine power. By the name of Ic Zod Heh Chal and by the spirit name of Nanta, I conjure thee. By the name of Cabalpt and Arbiz the holy names of God, and by the name of Nroam that great archangel who governeth thy lesser angle of the watchtower situated in the North, and by Taxir, the angel who is thy immediate superior, I do invoke thee, and by invoking, do conjure thee. And being armed with the power of Adonai, I do strongly command thee by Him who spake and it was done, and unto whom all creatures of the earth are obedient. And I, being made after the image of the Elohim, and endued therefore with the power of the Holy Spirit, created also unto divine will, do evoke thee by the name of Adonai ha-Aretz. (Vibrate by the Middle Pillar and circumambulate.) I conjure thee in the name of Adonai Melekh (vibrate by Middle Pillar, etc.), the lord and king of the earth. And I conjure ye powerfully by the three holy archangels of the kingdom—Metatron, Sandalphon, and Nephesch ha-Messiach—and by those powerful souls of fire, the Aschim. And I command thy manifestation in the name and power of Auriel the great archangel of earth. By these names do I evoke and conjure thee that thou dost forthwith leave thine abodes in the kingdom of earth and appear unto me here, visibly and in material form before me in the magical triangle without this circle, in fair shape and true. And by all these divine names do I command and conjure thee to manifest thyself.

Wherefore come now, thou angel Axir. Come! Manifest thyself in visible and material form before me, and without delay, from wherever thou mayest be, and make true and faithful answer unto those things I shall have cause to demand of thee. Come thou peaceably, visibly, and affably, and without delay, manifesting that which I desire. Come, I command ye, by all the holy names, by the archangels above thy kingdom, and by the rulers of thy realm. Come, Axir, come!

Take up sigil, smite it thrice with sword. Raise it in left hand, stamping thrice with right foot. Place veiled sigil in north, and say, as though from the throne of the east:

The voice of the exorcist said unto me, “Let me shroud myself in darkness, peradventure thus may I manifest myself in light. I am the only being in an abyss of darkness. From the darkness came I forth ere my birth, from the darkness of a primal sleep.” And the voice of the exorcist said unto me, “Creature of sigils, the light shineth in darkness, but the darkness comprehendeth it not.”

Pick up sigil in left hand and circumambulate once, attracting the light. Pass to south, and bar sigil with the sword.

Unpurified and unconsecrate, thou mayest not approach the gate of the west.

Purify with water and consecrate with fire, as in Neophyte ceremony. Then lift sigil aloft and say:

Creature of sigils, twice consecrate and twice purified, thou mayest approach the gate of the west.

Pass to west with sigil in left hand. Partially unveil it, and assume the astral mask of Axir. Smite the sigil once with flat of blade, and say:

Thou canst not pass from concealment unto manifestation, save by virtue of the name Elohim. Before all things are the chaos, the darkness, and the gates of the land of night. I am he whose name is darkness. I am the great one of the paths of the shades. I am the exorcist in the midst of the exorcism. Appear thou therefore without fear before me. For I am he in whom fear is not. Thou hast known me now, so pass thou on.

Reveil the sigil. Circumambulate once more, attracting the light, then halt at the north. Place sigil on the ground, purify and consecrate it as before, then pass to the east. Partially unveil the sigil, smite it once with the flat of sword, and assume the astral mask of the spirit.

Thou canst not pass from concealment unto manifestation, save by virtue of the name YHVH. After the formless and the void and the darkness, then cometh the knowledge of the light. I am that light which riseth in darkness. I am the exorcist in the midst of the exorcism. Appear thou therefore in visible form before me, for I am the wielder of the forces of the balance. Thou hast known me now, so pass thou on to the cubical altar of the universe.

Recover sigil, and return to altar. Stand at east, face west. Sword is held in right hand over sigil, left hand is placed flat over sigil on the white triangle. Invoke powerfully, and re-trace all sigils and pentagrams as may be required.

Thou who art the lord and king of Malkuth, having taken the earth for thy footstool, Adonai ha-Aretz and Adonai Melekh, grant unto me the power and help of the great archangel Auriel that he may command unto my assistance the angel Phorlakh and his ruler Kerub, that they working through me may cause to appear visibly and physically before me in this temple the angel Axir of the third lesser angle of the great northern quadrangle. Cause him to come swiftly from his abode in the darkling splendours of the hidden earth to manifest himself in the triangle without this circle.

Emor Dial Hectega, thou secret of secrets in the vast kingdom of earth, grant unto me the presence and power of Ic Zod Heh Chal, the mighty king of the north, that he may aid and guard me in this work of art. (Trace Saturn hexagram.) O ye six mighty angelical seniors who keep watch over the northern quadrangle, I invoke ye by your names: Laidrom, Alhectega, Aczinor, Ahmbicv, Lzinopo, Liiansa, that ye be present this day with me. Bestow upon me the firmness and stability whereof ye are masters in the element of Aretz, that I may evoke unto visible appearance in the triangle at the north of this circle the earthy angel Axir from the third lesser angle of the northern quadrangle.

Thahaaothe, thou great governor of the northern watchtower, I do invoke thee to send hither the angel Axir that in accordance with these sacred rites he may manifest unto me. Let him be for me a solid and tangible link, true and perfect, with all the powers of stability, majesty, and sanctity which rise rank upon rank from the feet of Malkuth even unto the throne of Aimah Elohim. To the end that the wisdom and light of the divine ones may descend upon my head; and through this creature of evocations, manifest unto me the perfect purity and the unsullied vision and perfect consecration of the hidden philosophical stone. That by its assistance I may ever pursue the great work in the pathway of light, and thus be the better able to help and teach my fellow men.

Therefore in the name of Cabalpt, I invoke thee, Axir. In the name of Arbiz, I powerfully command thy presence and physical manifestation before me. Come forth! Come forth! Manifest thou in visible form before me, O angel Axir. I conjure thee anew. Accept of me these magical sacrifices which I have prepared to give thee body and form. Herein are the magical elements of the holy kingdom, the foundation and throne of the Tree of Life. For these rose petals are the symbols of the gentle breezes wafting through the land of Ophir. And this oil is the fire thereof which shall accomplish thy salvation. This wine is the symbol of the waters which are, as it were, the blood of the earth, the water of thy purification. This bread and salt are types of earth, thy body which I destroy by fire that it may be renewed in manifestation before me. And the fire which consumes all is the magical flame of my will and the power of these ineffable and sacred rites.

As each element is mentioned, cast it on the charcoal block or the censer.

Come, therefore, Axir. Manifest thyself in power and presence, in comely and pleasing form, before me in the triangle placed without my magic circle. I command ye by all the names of God whose footstool is the realm of thy abode. For the spirit of the godhead is within me, and above me flames the glory of Adonai, and my feet are planted firmly by the might of Emor Dial Hectega. Come, therefore, come!

Elevate covered sigil. Remove the black cloth, leaving the cord on, and say:

Creature of earth, long hast thou dwelt in darkness. Quit the night and seek the day.

Replace sigil on altar, hold sword above it, and say:

By all the names, powers, and rites already rehearsed. I conjure thee unto visible appearance.

Khabs am pekht. Konx om pax. Light in extension. As the light hidden in darkness can manifest therefrom, so shalt thou become manifest from concealment unto manifestation.

Hold sigil in left hand, standing east of altar, face west, and recite the long conjuration as follows:

Taxir, thou angel of God, in the name of Emor Dial Hectega, and by the very powerful names of Cabalpt and Arbiz, I conjure thee to send unto me this angel Axir. Do thou cause him to manifest before me without this circle of art. Taxir, in the name of Adonai ha-Aretz, send thou unto me in a form material and visible this angel Axir. In the name of the great archangel of earth, Auriel (vibrate the name and trace sigils) send thou unto me in material form the angel Axir. In the name of Ic Zod Heh Chal, I command thee to come unto me, thou angel Axir. By the power of Thahaaothe, come unto me in visible form. In the divine names Nroam and Roam who are thy immediate superiors, come unto me thou angel Axir. O Taxir, Taxir, thou mighty angel of the earth angle of the northern quadrangle, in all the mighty names and seals and symbols here employed and displayed, I conjure thee in the name of the highest, to cause this spirit Axir to make a visible manifestation before me in the great triangle without this circle of art.

Take up sigil. Place it between pillars. Stand at the east before it and charge with the will powerfully in the Sign of the Enterer. Protect with the Sign of Silence. Manifestation should begin in the north. If not, repeat the invocation to Taxir in the east until it has been said three times, and then charge with will as before. If at the third invocation and charging no manifestation commences, replace the sigil on altar and address a prayer to the gods.

O ye great lords of the holy kingdom which is the throne of the Holy Spirit, ye spirits of life who preside over the weighing of souls in the place of judgment before Aeshoorist, lord of life triumphant over death. Give me your hands, for I am made as ye, who are the formers of the soul. Give me your hands and your magic power, that I may have breathed into my spirit the power and might irresistible to compel this angel Axir, of the northern quadrangle of earth, to appear before me, that I may accomplish this evocation of magical art, according to all my words and aspirations. In myself, O Adonai, I am nothing. In thee, thou great lord of Malkuth whose footstool is the earth, I am self and exist in the spirit of the mighty to eternity. O Thoth, who makest victorious the word of Osiris against his foes, make thou the words of me, who also am Aeshoorist, triumphant and victorious over this angel Axir, and thus rooted in a true foundation.

Return to pillars and charge. If manifestation commences, consecrate temple and sigil anew with fire and water. This done, remove the cord and hold sigil aloft, saying:

By and in the name of Adonai ha-Aretz and Adonai Melekh, I do conjure upon thee the power of perfect manifestation unto visible appearance.

Smite the sigil with the flat of blade and circumambulate thrice with sigil aloft in right hand. Go to east, after having placed sigil on the ground at the quarter where the spirit manifests, and utter a potent invocation to visible appearance.

Behold, thou great and mighty angel Axir, I have conjured thee hither at this time to demand of thee certain matters relative to the secret magical knowledge which shall be conveyed to me through thee from thy lord Emor Dial Hectega. But prior to my further proceeding, it is necessary that thou assume a shape and form distinctly material and visible. Therefore in order that thou mayest appear more fully tangible, know then that I am possessed of the means, rites, and powers of evoking thee. Thus do I rehearse before thee yet again the mighty words, names, and sigils of great efficacy.

Wherefore, make haste, thou mighty angel Axir, and appear visibly before me in the triangle without this circle of art.

Burn large quantities of heavy incense at this juncture. Then repeat the long invocation beginning on page 518. If necessary repeat it. Trace all seals, symbols, and sigils anew. Pass to between the pillars, holding sword, and say:

Hear me, ye guardians of the tenth Sephirah, Malkuth. Hear me, ye immortal powers of the magic of light, that this angel Axir hath been duly and properly evoked in accordance with the sacred rites.

O ye great lords of the royal kingdom, ye powers of Malkuth which receives the wisdom and power of the ten Sephiroth, ye I invoke and conjure. Cause this mighty angel Axir to perform all my demands; manifest ye through him the majesty and radiance of your presence, the divinity of your knowledge that I may be led one step nearer the fulfillment of the Great Work, that I may be taught how to purify my earthly self, and fix therein the glory of my higher and divine genius, and how I may find the hidden stone whereon the new spiritual name shall be written. And that in so doing, the being of this angel Axir may become more glorified and enlightened, and more responsive to the influx of that divine spirit which abides eternally in the heart of God and man.

Turn now to the triangle and address Axir.

O thou mighty angel, I do command and conjure thee not in my name but by the majesty of Adonai ha-Aretz and Emor Dial Hectega, the lord and king of earth, and ruler over Malkuth, that thou formulate between thy kingdom and my soul a true and potent link. That thou teach me the mystery of the earthly self of man, and how it may be made creative. Teach me in what manner it may be purified, and fix therein the hidden stone of the philosophers, that stone whereon is written the new name of redemption. And finally swear thou by the mighty magic seal which in my hand I hold that thou wilt always speedily appear before me, coming whensoever I call thee by word or will, or by a magical ceremony. To the end that thou mayest be a perpetual link of communication between the lords of Malkuth and my human soul therein.

When all is fulfilled and prior to his banishing, say:

Inasmuch as thou hast obeyed my wish, I now conjure thee, Axir, that thou hereafter harm me not, nor this place, my companions, or aught pertaining unto me, that thou faithfully perform all these things as thou hast sworn by the names of God, and that thou deceive in naught. Therefore do I burn, and feel thou, these grateful odours of the incense of my magic art which are agreeable unto thee.

Burn much incense. Also perform the L.V.X. signs and draw down the light on the manifestation.

And now I say unto thee, Axir, depart in peace in the name of Adonai ha-Aretz unto thine abodes and habitations. Let there ever be peace between me and you, and be thou ready to come when thou art called. May the blessing and light of Yeheshuah the redeemer be with thee, and inspire thee, and lead thee unto the ways of everlasting peace.

Pause for a few minutes. Reverse circumambulation. Reconsecration of temple with fire and water. Then powerful Banishing Rituals of Pentagram and Hexagram.

1. Note by Regardie: Hereafter, this form of opening the temple, up to the adoration, will be referred to as the formula of Opening by Watchtower. It is an ideal method of preparing any chamber for practical work, and even as a complete ceremony by itself has much to commend its very frequent use. As preparation for serious meditation, for skrying, for difficult magical works, it is as fine a preliminary as could be wished for.

2. Note by Regardie: For these, and the other Enochian keys, their translations, and directions for use, see Book Nine.
3. Note by JMG: The student should of course insert his or her own motto and rank in place of Regardie's, here and in the rituals that follow.
4. Note by JMG: That is, trace the symbol of Taurus rather than that of Saturn in the center of the hexagram.

CONSECRATION CEREMONY FOR JUPITER TALISMAN

Temple furniture arranged as for the grade of Neophyte. Banishing rituals of both pentagram and hexagram. Open the temple by the Ceremony of the Watchtowers. After adoration, perform the Invoking Hexagram Ritual of the Supernals, using Eheieh and Ararita. Employ the vibratory formula of the Middle Pillar to invoke Kether, and do not proceed until the sensation of the divine force is present in every vein and nerve. Then contemplate the higher and divine genius, and utter the following prayer.

Unto Thee, sole wise, sole eternal, and sole merciful one, be the praise and glory forever, who hath permitted me, who now standeth humbly before Thee, to enter thus far into the sanctuary of Thy mystery. Not unto me, Adonai, but unto Thy name be the glory. Let the influence of Thy divine ones descend upon my head, and teach me the value of self-sacrifice so that I shrink not in the hour of trial. But that thus my name may be written on high, and my genius stand in the presence of the holy one, in that hour when the Son of Man is invoked before the lord of spirits and his name before the Ancient of Days.

Pause. Then formulate pillars. Stand between them and make Sign of Practicus.

Let us adore the lord and king of water. Holy art thou, Lord of the mighty waters, whereon thy spirit moved in the beginning. Elohim Tzabaoth. Glory be unto thee, Ruach Elohim, whose spirit hovered over the waters of creation.

Go to the west. Before the water tablet make active and passive spirit pentagrams and invoking water pentagram with eagle Kerub in the centre, using lotus wand.

And the Elohim said: Let us make Adam in our own image, after our likeness, and let him have dominion. In the name Al, strong and mighty, spirits of water, adore your creator.

Sign the eagle Kerub with water cup.

In the sign of the head of the eagle, and in the name of Gabriel, great archangel of water, spirits of water, adore your creator.

Make cross with cup.

In the names and letters of the great western quadrangle, spirits of water, adore your creator.

Hold lotus wand on high.

In the three great secret holy names of God borne upon the Banner of the West, Empeh Arsel Gaiol, and in the name of Ra-Agiosel, great king of the west, spirits of water, adore your creator.

Still facing west, vibrate very powerfully the fourth Enochian key invoking the line Hcoma from the Tablet of Union. Formulate an astral Banner of the East surrounding one.

In the name of Elohim Tzabaoth and in the name of Al, I command ye, O ye dwellers in the realm of water that ye fashion for me a magical base in the Astral Light wherein I may invoke the divine forces to charge this talisman of Tzedek.

Go east, to begin the Supreme Invoking Ritual of the Jupiter Hexagram. Precede with Qabalistic cross, closing with keyword. Return to altar, so that the latter is between the operator and the previously ascertained position of Jupiter. The magus should wear, in addition to his Rose Cross lamen, a seal of Jupiter in proper colours.

O thou divine one who dwellest in the majesty and love of Chesed, the fourth Sephirah; Al, source of the river Gihon, lord of fire, look upon me, I beseech thee, as I perform this consecration ceremony. Let a ray from thy perfection descend upon me, to awaken within my being that which shall prove a channel for the working of thine abundant power. May this Jupiter talisman which I have made be a focus of thy light and life and love so that it may awaken within my soul a clear vision and a stronger aspiration to the light.

Draw the letters Al in Hebrew, and its sigil, in the heart, and vibrate it several times. Trace sigil and letters in the air first.

Grant unto me, thou great and merciful king of Chesed, the presence and power of thy holy archangel Tzadkiel that he may aid me with his power.

Draw the invoking hexagram of Jupiter and in it the sigil of Tzadkiel. Vibrate the name strongly.

O ye brilliant ones of Chesed, I conjure ye by the mighty name of Al, strong and mighty, and by the name of Tsadkiel whose throne and seat ye are. Chashmalim, come unto me now. Manifest yourselves through me, and fill my sphere with your magic power to accomplish this work of art.

Draw the sigil of Chashmalim, and vibrate the name.

Command unto me the presence of Sachiël, the angel of Jupiter, and his intelligence, Yohphiel, that they may consecrate this most powerful symbol. Yohphiel (vibrate several times) I conjure ye potently to make manifest your presence within my soul that this talisman of Jupiter may be charged. Come, now, O all ye powers and forces of the realm of Chesed, obey ye now the name of Al, the divine ruler of your kingdom, and Tzadkiel, your archangelic ruler and the mighty powers of the brilliant ones of Tzedek.

Place talisman outside the circle, to west, and then draw it within with the point of sword.

Creature of talismans, enter thou within this sacred circle that thou mayest become a dwelling place of Yohphiel, the intelligence of Jupiter, a body for the manifestation of the majesty of Chesed.

The talisman, which previously had been wrapped in black cloth and bound thrice with cord, should be purified with water and consecrated with fire.

In the name of Al, I proclaim all ye powers and forces now invoked that I, Ad Majorem Adonai Gloriam, Neophyte of the Stella Matutina, and Frater R.R. et A.C., have invoked ye in order to form a true and potent link between my human soul and that spirit of abundance and love and graciousness summed up in the name of Chesed. To this end I have formed and perfected a talisman bearing upon one side the sigil of Yohphiel the intelligence of Tzedek, and the geomantic symbols and sigils pertaining to Jupiter. On the other side is a seal referred to Jupiter, represented in flashing colours. This is now covered with a black veil and bound thrice with a cord, so that Yohphiel shall not see the light not move until he manifest unto me. I proclaim that this talisman shall be charged by the Intelligence Yohphiel, in order that spiritual vision may be mine, and that it may assist me to overcome all obstacles of both a spiritual and a material nature so that I may be enabled to perform the Great Work.

Pick up the talisman and place it at foot of altar.

I, Frater Ad Majorem Adonai Gloriam, do solemnly pledge myself in the name of Al to consecrate in due ceremonial form this Jupiter talisman. And I assert that with divine aid I shall invoke the intelligence Yohphiel from his abode in Tzedek that life and power may be imparted to this talisman. To the end that I may be assisted to perform the Great Work, and that I may be the better able to assist my fellow men. May the powers of Chesed witness this my solemn pledge.

Place talisman on the white triangle on altar. Stand west of altar and face east.

Ye powers of Chesed which I have invoked to this temple, know that all is now in readiness to consecrate this talisman. Aid me with your power that I may cause the great angel Yohphiel to give life and strength to this creature of talismans in the name of Al Ab.

Go to east of altar and face west. Place left hand on talisman, hold sword erect over it, and say, making over the talisman such lineal figures, seals, signs, and letters as may be named:

Abba, father of all fathers, thee I invoke by thy name Al. Descend, I beseech thee, through my being to manifest unto me the wisdom and love and that prodigality of spirit which are the characteristics of Tzedek. So that in the enhancement of my true spiritual nature I may continually aspire unto thy glory and grace. Grant unto me the power and help of thy great archangel Tzadkiel who is the righteousness of thy sphere. Tzadkiel, command, I beseech thee, to my assistance thy brilliant ones, the Chashmalim, that they may bind into this talisman the magnificence and mercy of Tzedek and all the powers of Chesed. Chashmalim, O ye brilliant ones of Jupiter, assist me in this my invocation of Sachiël. Sachiël, thou great angel of Tzedek, ruling therein by the virtue of Al Ab, whose name thou must obey, and in the name of Tzadkiel, your most potent archangel, I command ye to send hither thine intelligence, the Angel Yohphiel, that he may concentrate and bind into this talisman his life and power. In taking it for his body, let him thereby form a true and wonderful link for me with all those powers of love and wisdom, grace, abundance, and benignity which rise rank upon rank to the feet of the Holy Spirit. O ye divine powers of Chesed, manifest yourselves through this intelligence Yohphiel, to show forth the majesty of your realm, the love and the magnificence of your godhead, so that through this creature of talismans I may ever pursue the Great Work and assist in the initiation of my fellow men. And in so doing, grant that unto Yohphiel who shall charge this talisman, shall be given a great reward in that day when the crown of the glory of my genius shall be placed upon my head, and that his nature may become more illumined and glorified, more capable of receiving that divine influx which abides in the heart of God and man.

Lift talisman in left hand, smite it thrice with sword, and raise both it and sword aloft, stamping three times. Then take the talisman to north, and repeat:

The voice of the exorcism said unto me: Let me shroud myself in darkness, peradventure thus shall I manifest myself in light. I am the only being in an abyss of darkness. From the darkness came I forth ere my birth, from the silence of a primal sleep. And the voice of ages answered unto my soul, creature of talismans, the light shineth in the darkness, but the darkness comprehendeth it not. Let the mystic circumambulation take place.

Take the talisman and circumambulate. After going round once, stop in the south, and place it on ground.

Unpurified and unconsecrated, thou canst not enter the gate of the west.

Purify the talisman with water and consecrate with fire. Lift it with left hand, face towards west, and say:

Creature of talismans, twice purified and twice consecrated, thou mayest approach the gateway of the west.

Pass to west with talisman in left hand. Partly unveil it, smite it once with sword, and say:

Thou canst not pass from concealment unto manifestation, save by virtue of the name Elohim. Before all things are the chaos and the darkness and the gates of the land of night. I am he whose name is darkness. I am the great one of the path of the shades. I am the exorcist in the midst of the exorcism. Take on therefore manifestation before me without fear. For I am he in whom fear is not. Thou hast known me, so pass thou on.

Reveil talisman and carry it once more round the circle. Then halt in the north and place it on ground. Bar, purify, and consecrate as before, and after so doing, pass towards the east. Strike it, after unveiling it partly, and say:

Thou canst not pass from concealment unto manifestation save by virtue of the name YHVH. After the formless and the void and the darkness, then cometh the knowledge of the light. I am that light which ariseth in darkness. I am the exorcist in the midst of the exorcism. Take on therefore manifestation before me for I am the wielder of the forces of the balance. Thou hast known me now. Pass thou on unto the cubical Altar of the Universe.

Reveil the talisman, pass to the altar, place it on white triangle, and stand east, facing west, with left hand on talisman and sword held over it with right hand. Retrace all sigils, etc.

Thou intelligence of Tzedek named Yohphiel, I invoke thee in the divine name of Al. O thou, who art the father of all things, source of the mighty waters, lord of fire, thou whose heart is mercy, and whose being love, lift me up, I beseech thee, and manifest through me thy power and grace and thy generosity of spirit. Grant unto me the mighty power and help of the archangel Tzadkiel who rules over the divine realm of Chesed, that he may command to my assistance the choir of angels, those brilliant ones, the Chashmalim, that they may consecrate with power this talisman which lieth before thee. O ye brilliant ones of Jupiter, command unto me the angel of Tzedek, Sachiel, that he may cause Yohphiel, his intelligence, to come unto me. Yohphiel, thou great angel of Jupiter, thou divine intelligence of Tzedek, I invoke thee by the knowledge of thy name. I call thee by thy sigil, and the symbol of Jupiter which I bear upon my breast. Come unto me now, I conjure thee to give me of thy substance so that this creature of talismans may have power and life and love to make a divine link with all those powers of love and majesty and graciousness summed up, in the holy name of Chesed. I invoke thee powerfully by the name of Al (vibrate by formula of Middle Pillar and mystical circumambulation). Thus do I potently conjure and exorcise thee, to charge this talisman, thou intelligence Yohphiel.

Lift the talisman, remove the veil, leaving the cord underneath, and cry:

Creature of talismans, long hast thou dwelt in darkness. Quit the night and seek the day.

Replace it on the triangle upon altar, hold the pommel of the sword immediately over it, and say:

By all the names, powers, and rites already rehearsed, I conjure upon thee power and might irresistible. Khabs am pekht, Konx om pax, Light in extension. As the light hidden in darkness can manifest therefrom, so shalt thou become irresistible.

Pause and then invoke Amoun as follows, also using the Amoun godform:

O thou the concealed one, the opener of the day, thee, thee do I invoke. Amoun (vibrate by Middle Pillar). O thou circle of stars whereof my genius is but the younger brother, marvel beyond imagination, soul of eternity before whom time is ashamed, the Ruach bewildered, and the Neschamah dark, not unto thy majesty may I attain unless thine image be love. Therefore by seed and root, and by bud and leaf, and by flower and fruit of my entire being, do I invoke thee, whose name and power is love. (Assume godform of Amoun.) O secret of secrets that art hidden in the being of all that lives, lord secret and most holy—source of light, source of life, source of love, source of liberty—be thou ever constant and mighty within me that I may forever remain in thine abundant joy, Amoun (vibrate and circumambulate by Middle Pillar), thou father of all the great gods above, whose name is strength, whose being is love, whose nature is benign, thee do I invoke. Amoun. Mighty, merciful, magnificent, thee do I invoke. Thou whose Sephirah is Chesed, whose lordship is the realm of whirling fire and raging storm, thee, thee do I invoke. O thou whose head is of amethystine blue, whose heart is pitiful, and whose judgment just, where the rose dawn shines out amid the gold, thee do I invoke.

O Amoun (vibratory formula of Middle Pillar), before thee have I covered my face. Arise, great king, arise and shine in me, for I have hidden myself and stand humbly before the glory of thy face. In the chariot of life eternal is thy seat, and thy steeds course the firmament of Nu.

Behold! Thou didst lift up thy voice, and the hills were shaken! Thou didst cry aloud, and the everlasting hills did bow. O my father, my father; the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof. The sound of thy voice was freedom. Thy lightnings were kindled and lighted. Thy thunder was heard on the deep. The stars with thy fear shook and whitened, while the voice of the Lord was uplifted. The wilderness also obeys. For the flames of thy fire are rifted, and the waves of the sea know thy ways. They did hear thee, the cedars of Lebanon; and the desert of Kadesh hath known. O Amoun (vibratory formula) thou spirit of illimitable light and life and love. Thou with the plume and the wand, is thy path in the waters? The marvellous deeps of the sea? To that abyss of waters do I raise my soul to receive thy truth. Amoun (vibratory formula), I invoke thee; exalt my soul to the feet of thy glory. Hear me and manifest in splendour to him who worships at thy throne.

Pause, while circumambulating the force within.

This is the lord of the gods! This is the Lord of the Universe! This is he whom the winds fear. This is he, who having made voice by his commandment is lord of all things, king, ruler, and helper. I am he, the bornless spirit, having sight in the feet, strong and immortal fire. I am he, the truth. I am he who hate that evil should be wrought in the world. I am he that lighteneth and thundereth. I am he from whom is the shower of the life of earth. I am he whose mouth ever flameth. I am he, the begetter and manifester unto the light. I am he, the grace of the world, the heart girt with the serpent is my name. I am the sun in his rising passed through the hour of cloud and of night. I am Amoun the concealed one, the opener of the day. I am Osiris Onnophris the justified one, lord of light, triumphant over death. There is no part of me which is not of the gods. I am the preparer of the pathway, the rescuer unto the light. Let the white brilliance of the divine spirit descend.

Therefore with the light of the godhead above and within me do I invoke Tzadkiel, the archangel of Chesed, to command unto me the Chashmalim, the brilliant ones of Tzedek. Come unto me, ye brilliant ones, that the angel of Jupiter, Sachiel, may cause his intelligence, Yohphiel, to make powerful this consecrated telemata. Cause him to take this for his body that a true and sacred link may be formulated between the spirit of the godhead in Chesed and the human soul of the exorcist.

Lift the talisman and place it between pillars. Go east, face west, and in the Sign of the Enterer project the whole current of will upon the talisman. Protect with the Sign of Harpocrates. A light should play about the talisman. If not, repeat the above invocation from the throne of the east. As soon as the light is seen, quit the east and repurify and reconsecrate the talisman with water and fire. This done, remove the cord from talisman, lift it high, and smite it three times with sword, and proclaim:

By and in the names of Amoun the concealed one, and Al strong and mighty, I invoke upon thee the power of Jupiter, bestower and receiver.

Circumambulate three times with talisman in right hand. Return to the throne of the east, place the talisman upon the ground between the pillars, and repeat the invocation on page 528. Alternate it with this conjuration.

I heard the voice of the Holy One proclaim, "Thou art my son. This day have I begotten thee. Thou shalt rule the nations with a rod of iron. Thou shalt break them in pieces as a potter's vessel." Let therefore the elements obey the voice of YHVH. O ye spirits of flashing fire and air, spirits of water and earth, even ye legions of demons who dwell in the land of twilight, recognize in me your master, and in this creature of talismans one whom ye are powerless to hurt or touch. Turn ye, O ye creatures of night and the darkness; come and obey my will; serve and fear me. I bind even ye to help me in the works of the magic of light. I bind ye by the curse of Elohim Gibor and by the power of Kamael, and by the overwhelming powers of Geburah. By the awful curse of Paschal and the fire of the letter Shin. I summon and command ye all to do my will in the cause of this magical art, to the glory of the ineffable name. Look ye now upon this Jupiter talisman and tremble, for the powers of the divine ones are in it. Look ye now upon the exorcist, for the crown of the godhead is over him. Empty are your places in the world above. Your habitations are beneath my feet. Elohim, let there be unto the void restriction! Yeheshuah, where are now their gods?

O my father, I saw thee when thou camest forth from Edom, when thou wentest out of the field of Seir. Why were thy garments red, O mighty one? What were the sounds that behind thee rose from hell? A crying and a groaning, a wail as of pain! For the power of the mighty ones is shattered. Red are thy robes, my father, for their blood is spilt. Broken is the strength of hell. Fallen are its walls of adamant; heaped in ruins are its walls of deception. I came—and the Lord smote the warriors of ignorance. I came—and the thrones of the Ghogiel were empty. I came—and around me hovered the Auphanim, with Ratziel at their head, the lord of knowledge. O my father, there are the wheels of thy chariot. Al Ab blessed be thy name. Broken is thy strength, O concealer, and fallen are the powers wherein ye have trusted. Shaken are your fenced cities to their unseen foundations.

He shall hide me under the shadow of his wings. His truth shall be forever more in the name of this creature of talismans, because I have called upon the most high, even Amoun have I called my habitation. I shall tread upon the lion and adder. The young lion and dragon shall I trample under foot, because he hath set his love upon me. He will set me upon high, for I am he even as he is in me. Lift up your heads, O ye gates. Be ye opened, ye everlasting doors, that the king of glory may come in.

Make over talisman the sign of the Rending of the Veil, and say:

Let the white brilliance of the divine spirit descend upon this creature of talismans, to fill it with the glory of thy majesty, that forever it may be unto me an aid to aspire to the Great Work.

Draw flaming sword over talisman and say:

Glory be unto thee, lord of the land of life, for thy splendour flows out rejoicing, even unto the ends of the earth.

Take up talisman, pass to between pillars, formulate an astral Banner of the East about it, and say:

Behold ye powers and forces of Chesed which I have invoked. Take witness that I have duly consecrated this creature of talismans with the aid of Yohphiel, the intelligence of Tzedek, that it may aid me to overcome all spiritual and material obstacles, and by the exaltation of my higher nature assist me in my path to the light divine.

Wrap talisman in silk or linen, put it away, and announce:

In the name of Yeheshuah the Redeemer, I do now suffer all spirits bound by this ceremony, no longer needed in the service of this telemata, to depart in peace unto their places. May the blessing of Yeheshuah Yehovashah be with you now and forever more, and let there be peace between me and you.

Appendix to the Jupiter Talisman Ritual

The foregoing is a fairly good example of a ritual for the consecration of a talisman employing the formulae of the Neophyte ceremony described in the document Z.2. Properly performed, it takes about one and a half hours. There is a slight variation of this which can be employed, using the formula of the Rite of the Kerubic Stations from the Theoricus grade ceremony. If this is added, and the student should certainly experiment with its employment since it produces an astonishingly powerful effect, the total time taken by the ceremony will be around two hours. The result of this addition is to build up more deliberately an astral body of incarnation for the invoked spiritual force.

The best place for the insertion of this phase of the ceremony is after the three circumambulations, when the operator has projected the entire force of his will upon the talisman which is placed between the two Pillars. In this instance, the following appendix is added to just prior to the invocation repeated from page 528. I will repeat part of the rubric.

Circumambulate three times with talisman in right hand. Return to the throne of the east, and holding the talisman aloft, proclaim:

Behold the exorcist in the midst of the exorcism. And the power of the exorcist said unto the talisman: Let us enter the presence of the Ancient of Days. Arise, and come with me.

Still holding talisman aloft, attract the light as you pass between the pillars. Circumambulate, saying:

Amoun the concealed one spake and said: I am the secret of secrets hidden in the heart of all things. I am the grace of the majesty divine. I am the lord of perfected work.

Having circumambulated once, stop in the east, face east, saying:

Before thou canst be a means for the manifestation of the divine light thy body must be formed from the swift-flowing air.

Place talisman before the air tablet, and make round it the invoking circle and pentagram of active spirit with wheel and air pentagram with Aquarius Kerub:

In the name of YHVH, and in the name of Shaddai El Chai, and in the name of Raphael, your archangel, spirits of air, ye I command. Bind unto this creature of talismans the substance of your element of air. (Make cross.) In the three great secret holy names of God borne upon the Banner of the East: Oro Ibah Aozpi, spirits of air, give unto me the substance of your realm that it may be mine forever, binding it unto this creature of talismans which I have created. (Make invoking circle.) In the name of Bataivah, great king of the east, spirits of air, concentrate upon this creature of talismans the substance of your realm, so that the all-potent forces may descend and dwell therein as in a perfect body of manifestation, to the end that this creature of talismans may perform that for which it has been created. Creature of talismans, I have bound unto thee the air of life, that thy body may be truly formed. So pass we on.

Take up talisman in left hand and pass round again, endeavouring to formulate about it a sphere of light. Say:

Yohphiel spake unto the exorcist: I am the aspiration to the throne of Chesed. I am the intelligence of the sphere of Tzedek. I have entered the presence of the majesty divine through the power of the mighty name.

Having gone completely round, stop before fire tablet in south.

Before thy body can be filled with the glory of the divine ones in wisdom, it must be potent with the fire of life.

Place talisman before the fire tablet, make about it the invoking circle and pentagram of actives, and fire pentagram with Leo Kerub in centre, invoking:

In the name of Elohim and in the name of YHVH Tzabaoth, and by the name of Michael, your ruler, spirits of fire, ye I command. Bind into this creature of talismans the substance of your fiery realm. (Make cross.) In the three great secret holy names of God borne upon the Banner of the South, Oip Teaa Pedoce, spirits of fire, give unto me of the substance of your realm that it may be mine forever. Bind it unto this creature of talismans which I have created. (Make invoking circle.) In the name of Edelpernaa, great king of the south, spirits of fire, ye I command. Concentrate upon this talisman the substance of your realm, so that the all-potent forces descending may impart unto it a tireless strength, and an all-prevailing energy. So that unto me it may be a talisman ever helping me to aspire unto the divine with the extended flame of an all-penetrant vision. Creature of talismans, thou hast the fire of life. So pass we on.

Take up talisman and pass round completely, holding the talisman aloft, and attracting the light.

I have passed through the gates of wisdom and come unto the palace of peace. Give me your hands, O ye lords of truth, for I am made as ye. Ye are the teachers of the soul.

Go to west, face quarter, place talisman before water tablet, saying:

Before thou canst have a body fitted for the incarnation of the divine, thou must receive the water, the blood, and the tears for the remission of sins.

Make invoking circle and pentagram of passives, with wheel and invoking water pentagram with eagle Kerub.

In the name of Al, mighty and powerful, and in the name of Elohim Tzabaoth, and by the name of your archangel Gabriel, spirits of water ye I command. Infuse ye into this creature of talismans the substance of the waters. (Make cross.) In the three great secret holy names of God borne upon the Banner of the West, Empeh Arsel Gaiol, spirits of water, ye I command. Give unto me of the substance of your realm that it may be mine forever. Bind it unto this creature of talismans which I have created. (Make invoking circle.) In the name of Ra-agiosel, great king of the west, spirits of water, ye I command. Concentrate upon this creature of talismans the substance of your realm so that it may have a body firm and substantial, manifesting unto me as a solid in the Astral Light that through it the powers of Tzedek may manifest unto me. Creature of talismans, I have bound unto thee the water. So pass we on.

Take up talisman, raise it aloft again attracting the light, circumambulate, saying:

O Lord of the Universe, thou art in all things, and thy name is in all things. Before thee the shadows of the night roll back and the darkness hasteth away.

Pass on to north. Face earth tablet, and say:

Creature of talismans, before the mercy of Chesed can manifest in thy being, the elements of thy body must have an enduring stability.

Place talisman before earth tablet, make invoking circle round it and pentagram of passive spirit with wheel and invoking earth pentagram with Taurus Kerub, saying:

In the name of Adonai ha-Aretz and Adonai Melekh, spirits of earth, adore your creator. In the name of the bride and the queen of the kingdom, and by the name of your archangel Auriel, spirits of earth, ye are mine to command. Bind unto this creature of talismans the substance of your realm. (Make cross.) In the three great secret holy names of God borne upon the Banner of the North, Emor Dial Hectega, spirits of earth, give unto me of the substance of your realm that it may be mine forever. Bind it unto this creature of talismans which I have created. (Make invoking circle.) In the name of Ic Zod Heh Chal, great king of the north, spirits of earth, concentrate unto this creature of talismans the substance of your realm, that the all-potent forces may descend and rest upon it, even the grace and mercy of Tzedek. Creature of talismans, I have bound unto thee the element of enduring stability. So pass we on.

Take up talisman, and pass between pillars. Place it on the ground between them, and strongly formulate around it a sphere of sensation.

Creature of talismans, that the power of Amoun the concealed one may manifest through thee, I give thy body the soul of spirit.

Make passive and active spirit pentagrams. Also the Rose Cross symbol. Vibrate powerfully the Enochian exhortation used in the Portal ceremony.

In the name of Eheieh and Agla, and by all the names and letters of the mystical Tablet of Union, I command ye, O ye forces of Eth. I invoke ye, ye angels of the celestial sphere, whose dwelling is in the invisible, to give me of your light forever. Bind unto this creature of talismans the ethereal splendour of your realm so that it may become a living creature, well fitted to receive the incarnation of the divine. Give it life and energy, I beseech thee, so that always it may manifest unto me the glorious quality of Chesed.

Make the sign of the Rending of the Veil. Then repeat the invocation on page 529, beginning:

Abba, father of all fathers, thee I invoke by thy name Al, etc.

INVISIBILITY

Temple as in $0^\circ = 0^\square$ grade. Banish thoroughly with Lesser Ritual of the Pentagram and Hexagram, using Qabalistic cross and keyword. Purify with fire and water. Circumambulate three times. Return to altar for adoration.

Or open by the formula of the watchtowers.

Invoke the forces of the Tablet of Union by means of the Supreme Ritual of Pentagram, with active and passive spirit, with Eheieh and Agla. Return to altar, and recite the following Enochian spirit invocation:

Pause and feel the invoked force.

In the name of Yeheshuah Yehovashah, I invoke the power of the recording angel. I adjure thee, O light invisible, intangible, wherein all thoughts and deeds of all men are written. I adjure thee by Thoth, lord of wisdom and magic who is thy lord and god. By all the symbols and words of power; by the light of my godhead in thy midst. By Harpocrates, lord of silence and of strength, the god of this mine operation, that thou leave thine abodes and habitations to concentrate about me, invisible, intangible, as a shroud of darkness, a formula of defence; that I may become invisible, so that seeing me men see not, nor understand the thing that they behold.

Go to east and perform Invoking Hexagram Ritual of Binah, tracing Saturn hexagram with YHVH Elohim and Ararita. Close with I.N.R.I. Return to altar.

Lady of darkness who dwellest in the night to which no man can approach, wherein is mystery and depth unthinkable and awful silence. I beseech thee in thy name Shekinah and Aimah Elohim, to grant thine aid unto the highest aspirations of my soul, and clothe me about with thine ineffable mystery. I implore thee to grant unto me the presence of thy archangel Tzaphkiel, the great prince of spiritual initiation through suffering, and of spiritual strife against evil, to formulate about me a shroud of concealment. O ye strong and mighty ones of the sphere of Shabbathai, ye Aralim, I conjure ye by the mighty name of YHVH Elohim, the divine ruler of Binah, and by the name of Tzaphkiel, your archangel. Aid me with your power, in your office to place a veil between me and all things belonging to the outer and material world. Clothe me with a veil woven from that silent darkness which surrounds your abode of eternal rest in the sphere of Shabbathai.

Pause.

Come unto me, O Thmaah. Goddess of truth and justice, who presidest over the eternal balance in this hall of dual manifestation of truth. Auramooth, come unto me, thou lady of the purifying waters of life. Thaum-aesh-Neith, come unto me, lady of the consuming fire, purify me and consecrate me who am Aeshoorist, the justified one, lord of life, triumphant over death. Upon my brow are arrayed the twelve stars of light. Wisdom and understanding are balanced in my neschamah. Geburah and power on my right hand, and the thunderbolts of Mars! Chesed on my left hand and the sweet fountains of magnificence. In my heart is Yeheshuah, the reconciler, who is the symbol of golden harmony. My two thighs are as mighty pillars on the right and on the left supporting me; splendour and victory, for they cross with the currents reflected from the supernal light. I am established as an eternal rock of righteousness, for Yesod is the foundation of the righteous. The sphere of my nephesch, and the seven palaces of Malkuth are cleansed and consecrated, balanced and pure, in the might of thy name, Adonai, to whom be Malkuth, Gedulah, Geburah, the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valley.

Vibrate the names in the following invocation by the formula of the Middle Pillar, and circulate it through the body. Proceed slowly to make certain the power is invoked.

Hoor-po-krat-ist, thou lord of the silence. Hoor-po-krat-ist, lord of the sacred lotus. O thou Hoor-po-krat-ist (pause a moment or two to contemplate the force invoked), thou that standest in victory on the heads of the infernal dwellers of the waters wherefrom all things were created. Thee, thee I invoke, by the name of Eheieh and the power of Agla.

O thou divine babe in the egg of blue, lord of defence and silence, thou that bearest the rose and cross of life and light! Thee, thee I invoke for my exaltation to that light.

Behold! It is written: I am a circle on whose hands stands the twelvefold kingdom of my godhead. I am the alpha and the omega, the first and the last, for my life is as the circle of infinite heaven. I change, but death does not come nigh me. O ye divine birds of resurrection who are the hope of men's mortality, come unto me and aid me. Depart from me, ye workers of evil before the light of Aeshoorist.

Behold! He is in me and I in him. Mine is the lotus, as I rise as Harpocrates from the firmament of waters. My throne is set on high. My light is as that of Ra in the firmament of Nu. I am the centre and the shrine, the silence and the eternal light of godhead. Beneath my feet they rage in dumb impotence. For I am Hoor-po-krat-ist, the lotus-throned lord of silence. Were I to say, come up upon the mountains, the celestial waters would flow at my word, and the celestial fires would surge forth in torrents fierce of flame. For I am Ra enshrouded, Khephra unmanifest to man. I embody my father Hoor, the might of the avenging god, and my mother Isis, eternal wisdom veiled in eternal beauty and love.

Therefore I say unto thee, bring me unto thine abode in the silence unutterable, all-wisdom, all-light, all-power. Hoor-po-krat-ist, thou nameless child of eternity. Bring me to thee, that I may be defended in this work of art. Thou, the centre and the silence; light shrouded in darkness is thy name. The celestial fire is thy father. Thy mother the heavenly sea. Thou, the air of life, art the harmony of all, and lord against the face of the dwellers within the waters! Bring me, I say, bring me to thine abode of everlasting silence, that I may awake to the glory of my godhead, that I may go invisible, so that every spirit created, and every soul of man and beast, and everything of sight and sense, and every spell and scourge of God, may see me not nor understand!

And now, in the name of Elohim, let there be unto the void a restriction! Yeheshuah, where are now their gods? Oh my father, my father; there are the wheels of thy chariot! Lift up your heads, O ye gates! Be ye opened, ye everlasting doors, that the king of glory and of silence and of night may come in!

Thus do I formulate a barrier without mine astral form that it may be unto me a wall and as a fortress, and as a sure defence. And I now declare that it is so formulated, to be a basis and receptacle for the shroud of darkness, the egg of blue with which I shall presently girdle myself.

Trace active and passive spirit pentagrams and vibrate the Enochian invocation of Portal grade.

And unto ye, O ye forces of the spirit of life whose dwelling is in the invisible, do I now address my will. In the great names of your ruling angels Elexarph, Comananu, Tabitom, and by all the names and letters of the holy Tablet of Union, by the mighty names of God, Eheieh, Agla, YHVH Elohim, and by the great lord of silence, Hoor-po-krat-ist, by your deep purple darkness, and by the white and brilliant light of the crown above my head, do

I conjure ye. Collect yourselves about me, and clothe this my astral form with an egg of blue, a shroud of darkness. Gather yourselves, ye flakes of Astral Light, and shroud my form in your substantial night. Clothe me and hide me but at my control. Darken man's eyes that he see me not. Gather at my word divine, for ye are the watchers, and my soul is the shrine.

Invoke the highest by Qabalistic cross and I.N.R.I. Formulate the black egg around you, the idea of becoming invisible. Imagine the results of success, then say:

Let the shroud of concealment encircle me at a distance of eighteen inches from the physical body. Let the egg be consecrated with fire and water.

Place fire and water on either side of you.

O Auramo-oth and Thaum-Aesh-Neith, ye goddesses of the scales of the balance, I invoke and beseech you, that the vapours of this magical water and this consecrating fire be as a basis on the material plane for the formation of this shroud of art.

Formulate mentally the shroud.

I, A.M.A.G., frater of the Order of the G.D. and a 5° = 6° of the R.R. et A.C., a lord of the paths in the Portal of the Vault of the Adepts, do hereby formulate to myself the blue-black egg of Harpocrates as a shroud of concealment that I may attain unto knowledge and power for the accomplishment of the Great Work, and to use the same in the service of the eternal gods, that I may pass unseen among men to execute the will of my genius. And I bind and obligate myself, even as I was bound to the cross of obligation, and do spiritually swear and affirm that I will use this power to a good purpose only, to help me eventually to aid and serve my fellow man. And I declare that with the divine aid in this operation I shall succeed, that the shroud shall conceal me alike from men and spirits, that it shall be under my control, ready to disperse and to re-form at my command. And I declare that all is now ready for the due fulfillment of this ceremony of the magic of light.

Go to east of altar, facing west, left hand on triangle, right hand holding black band of lotus wand upright.

Come unto me, O shroud of darkness and of night, by the power of the name Yeheshuah Yehovashah. Formulate about me, thou divine egg of the darkness of spirit. I conjure ye, O particles of astral darkness, that ye enfold me as a guard and shroud of utter silence and of mystery in and by the name Eheieh, and the name Agla, the names of the centre of infinite light. In and by the name Exarp. In and by the name Hcoma. In and by the name Nanta. In and by the name Bitom, those holy names of the sacred Tablet of Union. In the name of YHVH Elohim which rules the divine darkness. In and by the name of Hoor-po-krat-ist, I conjure and invoke this shroud of concealment. By your deep purple darkness, and by the white brilliance of the genius about and within me, I invoke ye and conjure ye. I exorcise ye potently. I command and constrain ye. I compel ye to absolute, instant, and complete obedience, and that without deception or delay. For the light of my genius is upon me, and I have made YHVH my hope. Gather, ye flakes of Astral Light, to shroud my form in your substantial night. Clothe me and hide me in an egg of blue. Darken man's eyes, and blind him in his soul, so that he see me not. Gather, O gather at my word divine, for ye are the watchers, my soul the shrine.

Turn around three times. Resume former position and say:

In the name of the Lord of the Universe, and by the power of my Augoeides, and by the aspiration of thine own higher soul. O shroud of darkness and of mystery, I conjure thee, that thou encirclest me, so that I may become invisible. So that seeing me men may see me not, neither understand. But that they may see the thing that they see not, and comprehend not the thing that they behold. So mote it be!

Pass to north, face east, and say:

I have set my feet in the north, and have said: I will shroud myself in mystery and concealment. The voice of my higher soul said unto me, "Let me enter the path of darkness, peradventure thus may I attain the light. I am the only being in an abyss of darkness; from the darkness came I forth ere my birth, from the silence of a primal sleep." And the voice of darkness answered unto my soul, "I am he that formulates in darkness, the light that shineth in darkness, but the darkness comprehendeth it not." Let the mystic circumambulation take place in the place of darkness.

Go round, knock when passing east and west and east again. Pass to the south, halt, formulate the pillars of fire and cloud, reaching from darkness to the heavens. Formulate shroud between them, and pass to the west.

Invisible, I cannot pass by the gate of the invisible save by virtue of the name of darkness.

Formulate forcibly the egg of dark blue-black.

Darkness is my name, and concealment. I am the great one invisible of the paths of the shades. I am without fear, though veiled in darkness, for within me, though unseen, is the magic of the light divine.

Go round, knock as before, halt in north, formulate pillars, and the blue-black egg between them. Then pass to east.

Invisible, I cannot pass by the gate of the invisible, save by virtue of the name of light.

Formulate shroud forcibly.

I am light shrouded in darkness. I am the wielder of the forces of the balance.

Concentrate shroud mentally. Go west of the altar, remain standing, and say:

O thou divine egg of the creative darkness of spirit, formulate thou about me. I command thee by the name of Yeheshuah. Come unto me, shroud of darkness and of night. I conjure ye, O particles of spiritual darkness, that ye enfold me as an unseen guard and as a shroud of utter silence and of mystery. In and by the names Eheieh, Agla, and YHVH Elohim, I conjure thee. In and by the holy names Exarp, Bitom, Hcoma, Nanta, I invoke thee. In and by the names Elexarpeh, Comananu, Tabitom, I constrain thee. By the name of Hoor-po-krat-ist, I invoke this shroud of concealment. By the deep purple darkness of the eternal spirit of life, and by the white brilliance of the genius within me, I invoke ye and conjure ye to absolute and instant obedience, without deception or delay. For the crown of my father is upon me, and in YHVH is my trust. Gather, ye flakes of Astral Light, and shroud my form in your substantial night. Clothe me, and hide me in an egg of blue, so that seeing me, men may see me not, neither understand. But that they may see the thing that they see not, and comprehend not the thing that they behold. For ye are the watchers, my soul the shrine.

Egg of divine darkness, shroud of concealment, long hast thou dwelt concealed. Quit the light, that thou mayest conceal me before men!

Carefully formulate shroud about you.

I receive thee as a covering and a guard. Khabs am pekht. Konx om pax. Light in extension. Before all magical manifestation cometh the knowledge of the hidden light.

Go to the pillars. Face west and give the signs, steps, words, etc., and with the Sign of the Enterer project your whole will so as to realize the self fading out. The effect should be that the physical body will become gradually and partially invisible, as though a veil or cloud were coming between it and thee. Divine ecstasy may follow, but guard against loss of self-control. Make Sign of Silence forcibly, and vibrate with power the name Hoor-po-krat-ist.

Reformulate shroud, and circumambulate thrice. Intensely formulate shroud, stand at east, and say:

Thus have I formulated unto myself this shroud of darkness and of mystery as a concealment and a guard.

Supernal splendour which shinest in the sphere of Binah, YHVH Elohim, Aima, Shekinah, lady of darkness and of mystery, thou high priestess of the concealed silver star, divine light that rulest in thine own deep darkness. Come unto me, and dwell within my heart, that I also may have power and control, even I, over this shroud of darkness and of mystery. And now I conjure thee, O shroud of darkness and of mystery, that thou conceal me from the eyes of all men, from all things of sight and sense, in this my present purpose, which is to remain invisible for the space of one hour, and to receive therein the holy mysteries of the lord of silence enthroned upon his lotus, Hoor-po-krat-ist.

When it is wished to banish the shroud, make very forcibly the Qabalistic cross, to bring down the light, and then analyse the keyword, invoking the divine white brilliance. Then say:

In the name of YHVH Elohim, I invoke thee, who art clothed with the sun, who standest upon the moon, and art crowned with the crown of twelve stars. Aima Elohim, Shekinah, who art darkness illuminated by the light divine, send me thine archangel Tzaphkiel, and thy legions of Aralim, the mighty angels of the sphere of Shabbathai, that I may disintegrate and scatter this shroud of darkness and of mystery, for its work is ended for the hour.

I conjure thee, O shroud of darkness and of mystery, which has well served my purpose, that thou now depart unto thine ancient ways. But be ye, whether by a word or will, or by this great invocation of your powers, ready to come quickly and forcibly to my behest, again to shroud me from the eyes of men. And now I say unto ye, depart ye in peace, with the blessing of God the vast and shrouded one, and be ye very ready to come when ye are called!

Make Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram and Hexagram. Stand in astral Banner of the East.

TRANSFORMATION

Open the temple arranged as for $0^\circ = 0^\square$ by usual banishings and the Ceremony of the Watchtowers. After the adoration, face east, and invoke the name Eheieh by the vibratory and circumambulation formula of the Middle Pillar. Do not proceed until the physical sensation of the invoked force is experienced. Then contemplate the higher genius for some little while. Lift both hands on high.

In the divine name I.A.O., I invoke thee, thou great and holy angel Hua. Lay thy hand invisibly upon my head in attestation of this my solemn aspiration to the light. Aid and guard me I beseech thee, and confirm me in this path of truth and rectitude, for the glory of the ineffable name.

Lower arms, and quietly utter:

Unto Thee, sole wise, sole eternal, and sole merciful one, be the praise and glory forever, who bath permitted me, who now standeth humbly before Thee, to enter thus far into the sanctuary of Thy mystery. Not unto me, Adonai, but unto Thy name be the glory. Let the influence of Thy divine ones descend upon my head, and teach me the value of self-sacrifice so that I shrink not in the hour of trial, but that thus my name may be written on high and my genius stand in the presence of the holy one, in that hour when the Son of Man is invoked before the lord of spirits and his name before the ancient of days.

Formulate the pillars, and make $2^\circ = 9^\square$ sign between them.

Let us adore the lord and king of air.

Go forward to air tablet. Make active and passive spirit pentagrams, and invoking air pentagram with Aquarius.

And the Elohim said, "Let us make Adam in our own image, after our likeness, and let them have dominion over the fowl of the air." In the name YHVH and in the name Shaddai El Chai, spirits of air, adore your creator!

Make the Aquarius Kerub before tablet with air dagger.

In the sign of the head of the man, and by the name of Raphael, great archangel of air, spirits of air, adore your creator.

Make cross with rose or the censer.

In the names and letters of the great eastern quadrangle, spirits of air, adore your creator.

Hold lotus wand on high.

In the three great secret holy names of God borne upon the Banner of the East, Oro Ibah Aozpi, spirits of air, adore your creator.

Trace whorl in front of air tablet with lotus wand.

In the name of Bataivah, great king of the east, spirits of air, adore your creator.

Still facing east, vibrate powerfully the third Enochian key, invoking the line Exarp from the Tablet of Union. Then formulate an astral Banner of the East about one.

In the name of Shaddai El Chai, and in the name of YHVH, I command ye, ye dwellers in the realms of air, that ye fashion for me a powerful magical base in the Astral Light whereon I may build a true body of transformation.

Perform the Supreme Invoking Ritual of the Luna Hexagram, precede with Qabalistic cross, closing with keyword. Return to altar, face east, and say:

Crowned with starlight, and clothed with the sun, I invoke thee who art the ultimate root of all things, for thy righteousness and love are the foundations of the universe. Look upon me as I perform this ceremony, and, I beseech thee, let a ray of thy power descend here and now to awaken within my soul that power which shall prove a true channel for the working of the divine strength. May this ceremony to form a body of transformation of the holy goddess Isis enable me to progress in the Great Work, clarifying my spiritual vision, and illuminating me so that I may be the better able to help my fellow men.

Draw the name Shaddai El Chai and sigil in heart, while facing east, and vibrate it several times by the vibratory formula of the Middle Pillar. Then trace sigil and Hebrew letters of the name in the air with the lotus wand.

Grant unto me the presence, I beseech thee, of thy great archangel of the sphere of Yesod, that he may aid me at this time, even Gabriel, the archangel of strength and power.

Draw the invoking hexagram of Luna and in it the sigil and letters of Gabriel. Vibrate it similarly several times.

O ye mighty ones of the sphere of Yesod, I invoke ye by the mighty name of Shaddai El Chai, whose seat and throne ye are, and by the name of Gabriel, your archangel. Come unto me now, and let the magical force of Yesod flow through me so that I may accomplish this work of transformation.

Draw sigil of Kerubim in the hexagram. Pause for some while, formulating the godform of Isis.

In the name of Shaddai El Chai, I proclaim all ye powers and forces of Yesod, that I, Ad Majorem Adonai Gloriam, Neophyte of the Golden Dawn, and a Frater Roseae Rubeae et Aureae Crucis, have summoned ye to my presence for the forming of a true and potent link between my human soul in Malkuth and the great goddess Isis, whose true abode is in the supernals, yet reflected in Yesod, the eternal foundation of all things. To this end I now formulate a magical image of Isis in the Astral Light, so that by its assumption and with the divine aid I may be transformed from corruption into incorruption, and putting aside mortality become divinity itself through the descent of that supernal light which cometh with healing in its wings. And I solemnly pledge myself to use this body of transformation of the goddess Isis for the forwarding of the highest aspirations of my soul, and for the pursuit of the Great Work, that it may in very truth become a perfect body of transmutation. Formulate before me now in the evoked elements of air, O ye powers of Yesod, a true and tangible form of Isis, that through its assumption, my own inner being may be wholly dissolved as though eaten up by the airs of the spirit, and transformed into a divine transfiguration. To the end that by the descent of the Shekinah and my assumption into the Holy Spirit, I may become the embodiment of the true magic of light, and acquire more perfect knowledge to help my fellow men.

And I now declare that all is in readiness for this magical operation, devoted to the formulation of a body of transformation of the goddess Isis.

Pass to the west of the temple with fire and water, and place them either side of the formulation of Isis, saying:

O form of Isis, I formulate thee in the name Ad Majorem Adonai Gloriam, that thou mayest become a living body for the manifestation of the wisdom of godhead. And in the holy names of the goddesses of the scales of the balance, I purify thee with water and consecrate thee with fire, that from the vapours of these elements a basis may be formed for thee in the Astral Light.

Pass to the east of the altar, facing west. In the west, kneeling at the altar where in the Neophyte ceremony the newly-admitted aspirant would be, formulate the godform of Isis. Imagine that your left hand holds the left hand of the form. Hold the black section of the lotus wand in the right hand, tracing over the form such letters, sigils, and lineal figures as may occur in the following oration.

In the divine name Shaddai El Chai, I invoke thee, thou great goddess of nature who clothest thyself with the forces of life as with a garment. O thou who art Isis, the high priestess of the silver star, the perfect purity and illumination of the divine presence of the supernal light, whose sphere is Yesod reflecting the light and air from the crown. Lift me up, I beseech thee, through the Path of Tau, and manifest unto me a body of transformation, showing forth thy love and power and stability. Grant unto me the mighty power and help of the archangel Gabriel who rules over the fundamental strength of Yesod, that he may command to my assistance the choir of angels, the Kerubim, that they may formulate with power this form of Isis. Let them give life and vitality unto this form of transmutation before me: Let them bind therein the reflection of the light of the supernals so that by my assumption of it, the body of transformation may become a solid link, tangible and unbreakable with all those powers of love and understanding which rise rank upon rank to the feet of the Holy Spirit. Grant that the wisdom and light of the divine ones may descend and through this form, manifest unto me the true holiness and unsullied vision of the light.

Vibrate and circumambulate Isis by the vibratory formula of the Middle Pillar. Holding lotus wand by the black end, directing flower over the head of form, say:

In the name of the Lord of the Universe, arise before me, O form of Isis unto which I have elected to transform myself, so that seeing me, men may see the thing they see not, and comprehend not the divine form that they see.

Leave altar and move slowly towards the north.

Pass towards the north shrouded in darkness, O form of Isis into which I have elected to transform myself. The voice of the transformer said, "Let me enter the path of darkness, peradventure thus may I manifest the light. I am the only being in an abyss of darkness, from the darkness came I forth ere my birth, from the silence of a primal sleep." And the voice of the transformation said unto me, "Child of Earth, the light shineth in darkness, but the darkness comprehendeth it not." Let the mystic circumambulation take place.

Pass round once leading the form. Formulate it in the south between two pillars, and place fire and water on either side. Pass to west, endeavouring to visualize the form strongly.

Thou canst not pass from concealment unto manifestation save by virtue of the name of Elohim. Before all things are the chaos, the darkness, and the gates of the land of night. I am he whose name is darkness. I am the great one of the paths of the shades. I am the transformer in the midst of the transformation. Formulate thou without fear before me as a firm body of transformation, for I am he in whom fear is not. Thou hast known me, O thou form of Isis, pass thou on.

Pass round once. Bring it to north, between pillars, and place fire and water on either side. Then go east, visualizing Isis.

Thou canst not pass from concealment unto manifestation save by virtue of the name YHVH. After the formless, the void and the darkness, then cometh the knowledge of the light. I am that light arising in darkness. I am the transformer in the midst of the transformation. Manifest thou therefore as a tangible body of transformation, for I am the wielder of the forces of the balance. Thou hast known me now, O form of Isis, so pass thou on unto the cubical Altar of the Universe.

Pass to east of altar, formulating Isis as standing west in the place of the candidate.

And I beheld a great wonder in heaven. A woman clothed with the sun, with the moon at her feet, and on her head was the diadem of the twelve stars. O thou queen of love and mercy, thou crowned with the throne, homed as the moon, whose countenance is mild and glowing, hear me, O Isis, hear and save. Isis (vibrate by Middle Pillar), thou who art in matter manifest, mother, queen, and daughter of the justified one, thee, thee do I invoke. O virgin glory of the godhead unspeakable, immortal queen of the gods, I invoke thee. Isis (circumambulate within), by this lotus, the sacred flower of thy life, I invoke thee, I who dwell in the vast hall of living death, crying as thy child Horus towards the Golden Dawn. Isis (vibrate), bid me awake, O mother, from the darkness of this earthy tomb, that I may as the living Osiris speak back to thee. O Isis, thou form of the Holy Spirit, from the marble halls of life, the immeasurable deep of Yesod, the sea of the sacred love, I invoke thee. Isis (circumambulate within), descend from thy palace of the stars.

O mother, O archetype eternal of maternity and love, O mother, the flower of all mothers, whose voice all Amenti hears. Speak unto me and manifest about me that I may rise from the chaos, from the world of shapeless and illusory forms, of dead men's husks, and unsubstantial things. O Isis, great queen of heaven, supernal splendour which dwellest in that light to which no man may approach, wherein is mystery and awful silence, come unto me, and make open the gates of bliss. Hail unto thee, O thou mighty mother. Isis, unveil thou, O soul of nature, giving life and energy to the universe. From thee all things do proceed. Unto thee all must return. Thou springest from the sun of splendour, shrouded from all. Lead me to the truth, bright maiden of the night, and guide me in all my wanderings in darkness, as I travel upwards and onwards to the light of the eternal crown. Come forth, O gracious mother. Come unto me and dwell within my heart, thou who art crowned with starlight, who shineth amongst the lords of truth; whose place is in the abode of the light of heaven. Isis (vibrate and circumambulate).

Now address the body of Isis as though it were physically visible before you at the altar.

Child of Earth, long hast thou dwelt in darkness. Quit the night and seek the day.

Draw the form towards you, so that it envelopes you.

I receive thee as a true body of Isis, a body of transformation. Khabs am pekht. Konx om pax. Light in extension.

Analyse keyword and make the L.V.X. signs.

Before all magical manifestation cometh the knowledge of the light divine.

Move forward to the pillars and face west. Endeavour to feel the form of Isis as almost physical. Then make the $0^\circ = 0^\square$ signs powerfully, and to feel actually in the shape desired. The form should seem as a cloud of mist enveloping you, but not yet wholly visible. When this occurs, but not before, formulate the pillars standing on either side. If not, repeat the conjuration, and then return to pillars. Circumambulate the temple three times, completely enshrouded by form. Then say:

Thus have I formulated unto myself this transformation.

Still in the east, utter the following conjuration:

Shaddai El Chai, almighty and ever living one, blessed be thy name, ever magnified in the life of all. (Vibrate the name by the Middle Pillar, and mystic circumambulation.) Grant unto me the power and presence of the archangel of Yesod, Gabriel, who rules over the Kerubim, that they may vitalize and make strong this form of the godhead, so that it may be moulded as upon a firm and stable foundation, and inspired as a living body of Isis. Grant also unto me that this form of Isis which I have formulated may remain clear and strong so long as I shall have need of it, and that I may retain it under proper control and guidance until it shall have accomplished the work of transformation.

Return to altar, addressing the form.

O thou form of Isis, which I have created to envelope and transform me, be thou in truth open to the divine presence, the understanding and love of the supernals. Be thou open to the wisdom and glory of the goddess Isis so that thou mayest be a living soul within me, and to prove my transfiguration, a body and soul of resurrection. For the desire of the heavenly house hath eaten me up, and I desire to be with thee, O Isis. Implant within me the seeds of love and understanding, so that I may prosper in the Great Work and assist others to its glory.

Before leaving the temple with the godform, say:

In the name of Yeheshuah, the redeemer, I do now suffer all spirits who may have been bound by this ceremony, and who are not now needed in the work of transformation, to depart unto their abodes and habitations, with the blessing of YHVH.

Having obtained the desired effect, and when the form no longer is needed, return to temple and shatter the form with the conjuration.

In and by the name Shaddai El Chai, with the aid of Gabriel, great archangel of Yesod, and the Kerubim, I do now banish the powers of Yesod, and all the spirits of air from this form. Disintegrate it, I command ye, by all the divine names, and depart ye in peace unto your habitations, and let there ever be peace between me and you. Dissipate every vestige of this form, and let its elements return into their component parts. I now cast it forth. Let it cease to be.

In the name Shaddai El Chai, I now declare this temple closed.

Perform the Banishing Rituals of the Pentagram and Hexagram.

SPIRITUAL DEVELOPMENT

Hekas, hekas este bebeloi.

Face east, make Qabalistic cross, and perform the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram, with the black end of the lotus wand, holding it by the white band. Then perform the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Hexagram. Make the full L.V.X. signs.

Advance to altar without wand and take therefrom the fire wand. Face south, raise the wand above thy head, and slowly circumambulate with Sol, saying:

And when, after all the phantoms have vanished, thou shalt see that holy and formless fire, that fire which darts and flashes through the hidden depths of the universe, hear thou the voice of fire.

On reaching south, making the invoking fire pentagram and say:

Oip Teaa Pedoce. In the names and letters of the great southern quadrangle, I invoke ye, ye angels of the watchtower of the south.

Replace wand on altar, take cup, and go west. Sprinkle to west and circumambulate temple with Sol, saying:

So therefore, first, the priest who governeth the works of fire must sprinkle with the lustral water of the loud resounding sea.

On reaching west sprinkle with water, make invoking water pentagram and the sign of the eagle's head, and say:

Empeh Arsel Gaiol. In the names and letters of the great western quadrangle, I invoke ye, ye angels of the watchtower of the west.

Replace cup, take dagger, strike towards east, and circumambulate with Sol, saying:

Such a fire existeth, extending through the rushings of air, or even a fire formless, whence cometh the image of a voice; or even a flashing light, abounding, revolving, whirling forth, crying aloud.

On reaching east, strike forward with dagger, and make invoking air pentagram, saying:

Oro Ibah Aozpi. In the names and letters of the great eastern quadrangle, I invoke ye, ye angels of the watchtower of the east.

Replace dagger. Take pentacle, go north, shake thrice, and circumambulate with Sol, saying:

Stoop not down into the darkly splendid world wherein lieth continually a faithless depth and Hades wrapped in gloom, delighting in unintelligible images, precipitous, winding; a black, ever-rolling abyss, ever espousing a body, unluminous, formless, and void.

Reaching the north, shake pentacle thrice and with it make invoking earth pentagram, saying:

Emor Dial Hectega. In the names and letters of the great northern quadrangle I invoke ye, ye angels of the watchtower of the north.

Replace pentacle. Take incense, go west of altar, face east, raise it, describing active equilibrating spirit pentagram, saying:

Exarp Bitom.

Describe passive equilibrating spirit pentagram, saying:

Hcoma Nanta. In the names and letters of the mystical Tablet of Union, I invoke ye, angels of the celestial spheres, whose dwelling is in the invisible. Ye are the guardians of the gates of the universe; be ye also the watchers of my mystic sphere. Remove and banish far the evil; strengthen and inspire me that I may preserve unsullied this my body, as the abode of the mysteries of the eternal gods. Let my sphere be pure and holy so that I may be able to enter into the centre of my being, and become a partaker of the secrets of the divine light.

Pass to the north. Take lotus wand and say:

The visible sun is the dispenser of light to the earth. Let me therefore form a vortex in this chamber that the invisible sun of the spirit may shine thereinto from above.

Circumambulate with Sol thrice, saluting with $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$ signs as you pass the east. Go west of altar, face east, and extend arms in the form of a cross, say:

Holy art Thou, Lord of the Universe.

Holy art Thou whom nature hath not formed.

Holy art Thou, the vast and the mighty one,

Lord of the light and the darkness.

Take lotus wand by white band, perform invoking hexagram ritual of the supernals, and pentagram ritual of spirit, and say:

Supernal splendour which dwellest in the light to which no man can approach, wherein is mystery, and depth unthinkable, and awful silence. I beseech thee, who art Shekinah and Aimah Elohim, to look upon me in this ceremony which I perform to thine honour and for my own spiritual development. Grant thine aid unto the highest aspirations of my soul, in thy divine name YHVH Elohim, by which thou dost reveal thyself as the perfection of creation, and the light of the world to come.

I implore thee to grant unto me the presence of thy archangel Tzaphkiel. (Trace sigils as required and vibrate powerfully.) O Tzaphkiel, thou prince of spiritual initiation through suffering and of spiritual strife against evil, aid me, I beseech thee, to conquer the evil that is in me by the binding and controlling of my mortal parts and passions.

O ye strong and mighty ones of the sphere of Shabbathai, O ye Aralim, Aralim, I conjure ye by the mighty name of YHVH Elohim, the divine ruler of your realm, and by the name of Tzaphkiel, your archangel. Aid me with your power, in your office to place a veil between me and all things belonging to the outer and lower world. Let it be a veil woven from that silent darkness which surrounds your abode of eternal rest in the sphere of Shabbathai, that in this chamber of the divine mystery, I may hear nothing that comes not from on high, and see naught that may distract my vision from the glory of the eternal crown. That I may behold only the holy vision that descends from that divine brilliance, the scintillation and coruscation of the divine glory. That divine brilliance, that light which lighteth the universe, that light which surpasseth the glory of the sun, beside which the light of mortals is but darkness. That in the closing of my physical senses to the vibrations of the outer and the lower, I may learn to awaken those spiritual faculties by which I may attain at length to perfect union with divine and unalterable being.

Consider the divine ideal, and say slowly:

From thine hands, O Lord, cometh all good. From thine hands flow down all grace and blessing. The characters of nature with thy finger thou hast traced, but none can read them unless he hath been in thy school. Therefore, even as servants look unto the hands of their masters and handmaidens unto their mistresses, even so do our eyes look up unto thee, for thou alone art our help, O Lord of the Universe. All is from thee, all belongeth unto thee. Either thy love or thine anger all must again re-enter. Nothing canst thou lose, for all must tend to thine honour and majesty. Thou art Lord alone, and there is none beside thee. Thou doest what thou wilt with thy mighty arm and none can escape from thee. Thou alone helpst in their necessity the humble and meek-hearted and poor who submit themselves unto thee; and whosoever humbleth himself in dust and ashes before thee, unto such a one art thou propitious. Who should not praise thee, O Lord of the Universe, unto whom there is none like, whose dwelling is in the heavens and in every virtuous and god-fearing heart.

O God, the vast one, thou art in all things. O nature, thou self from nothing, for what else can I call thee. In myself, I am nothing, in thee I am self, and exist in thy selfhood from nothing. Live thou in me and bring me unto that self which is in thee, Amen.

I desire the attainment of the knowledge and conversation of my higher and divine genius, the summum bonum, true wisdom and perfect happiness, the power of the great transformation.

Kneel west of the altar, and say, whilst aspiring strongly:

In the divine name I.A.O., I invoke thee, thou great avenging angel Hua, to confirm and strengthen me in the path of the light. O messenger of the beloved one, let thy shadow be over me. Thy name is death, it may be, or shame or love. So thou bringest me tidings of the beloved one I shall not ask thy name. Keep me steadfast in the path of rectitude and self-sacrifice. Confer upon me the power of discernment that I may choose between the evil and the good, and try all things of doubtful and fictitious seeming with sure knowledge and sound judgment.

Rise, project the astral ⁵ to the east of the altar. Hold the lotus wand in the right hand, turn, face your body, take the left hand in the left hand of the astral, and in both astral and physical say:

Eheieh. Eheieh. Eheieh. Eheieh. (Vibrate and circumambulate by formula of the Middle Pillar.) Thou who dwellest in the boundless light, in whom only is being, who alone can say I Am, beginner of movement, bestower of the gift of life in all things, thou who fillest the limitless universe with thy essence, grant unto me the presence of the prince of countenances, the great angel Metatron, he who bringeth others before the face of God. Let him lead me in my aspirations after that divine and only selfhood which is in thee, that I may be enabled so to live that by the absolute control and purification of my natural body and soul, I, having no other desire, may become a fit dwelling for my higher genius. For the desire of thy house, O Adonai, hath eaten me up, and I desire to be dissolved and be with thee. May my human nature, becoming as the perfect Malkuth, the resplendent intelligence, be thus exalted above every head and sit on the throne of Binah, and being clothed with the sun, illuminate the darkness of my mortal body. Cause the divine influx to descend from that great archangel Metatron, to rend away the veils of darkness from my mortal vision, that I may know thee, Adonai, the only true self, and Yeheshuah Yehovashah, thy perfect messenger, the guardian angel in me, my only hope of attainment to the eternal glory.

Place aside the astral lotus. Return into the physical body, place sword on neck, and say:

So help me, the Lord of the Universe and my higher soul.

Rise, holding sword in right hand. Raise both arms on high. Contemplate with imagination and aspire unto the ideal, and say:

I invoke thee, Hru, thou great angel who art set over the operations of this secret wisdom. Strengthen and establish me in my search for the mysteries of the divine light. Increase my spiritual perception and assist me to rise beyond that lower selfhood which is nothing unto the highest selfhood which is in God the vast one.

Pass to the north. Project the astral to the throne of the Hierophant in the east, and facing your body, say:

The voice of my higher self said unto me, "Let me enter the path of light, peradventure I may be prepared to dwell there. I am the only being in this glory of the ineffable. From the divine brilliance came I forth at my birth, from the splendour of the infinite light."

Return to body. Circumambulate with Sol, saying, while drawing down the divine brilliance into the vortex, having formulated an angel torchbearer who lights and leads the way:

I am Osiris, the sun veiled by night, united to the higher by purification, perfected through suffering, glorified through trial. I have come where the great gods are, through the power of the mighty name. YHVH. Tzaphkiel.

Then pass round again following the angelic Kerux.

I have passed through the gates of the firmament. Give me your hands, O ye lords of truth, for I am made as ye. Hail unto ye, for ye are the formers of the soul. Yod He. Raziel.

Pass on and halt in south. Formulate the two pillars, and aspire to the genius. Pass to the west, and say:

Before all things are the chaos, the darkness, and the gates of the land of night. Therefore in the place of the guardian of the gate of the west, I tread thee down beneath my feet, O form of darkness and of fear. For fear is failure, and except I be without fear, I cannot cast out the evil ones into the earth. I have conquered thee, so I pass on.

Go round, saying:

O Lord of the Universe, thou art above all things, and thy name is in all things, and before thee the shadows of the night roll back and the darkness hasteth away. Eheieh. Metatron.

Thus have I formulated the white triangle of the light divine that, rising and expanding, may shine within my heart, a centre of the supernal splendour.

Stop in the north, form the pillars, aspire. Pass east, say:

After the formless and the void and the darkness, then cometh the knowledge of the light. So in the place of the guardian of the gate of the east, I draw thee into my heart, O vision of the rising sun. Thou dwellest in the place of the balance of the forces, where alone is perfect justice. Unbalanced mercy is but weakness, and unbalanced severity is cruelty and oppression. Therefore, in the name of the motionless heart, I pass on unto that great altar whereon is sacrificed the body of my higher genius.

Pass to cauldron on the altar. Stand at east of altar, facing west, and as you read, place the ingredients into the cauldron.

O Adonai, thou mighty and secret soul that is my link with the infinite spirit, I beseech thee in the name of Eheieh and in the tremendous name of strength through sacrifice Yeheshuah Yehovashah, that thou manifest in me. Manifest thou unto me, I beseech thee my angel, for my assistance in the Great Work so that I, even I, may go forward from that lower selfhood which is in me, unto that highest selfhood which is in God the vast one. That thou mayest be able to manifest thyself unto me, in me, and by a material manifestation I do here offer unto thee the elements of the body of Aeshoorist upon the place of foundation.

For Osiris Onnophris hath said, "These are the elements of my body, perfected through suffering and glorified by trial. For the scent of the dying rose is as the suppressed sigh of my suffering. And the flame red fire as the strength of mine undaunted will. The cup of wine is as the pouring forth of the blood of my heart, sacrificed unto regeneration, unto the newer life. And the bread and salt is as the foundation of my body which I destroy in order that it may be renewed."

Wherefore behold! Into this brazen cauldron I cast this wine, this bread and salt, and finally this rose, that their essences may be volatilized by the fire which is beneath. Accept now these elements thus volatilized by the fire, and from them form a body by me and in me, that thou my genius, the spirit of my soul, mayest manifest thyself physically unto me, for my assistance in the Great Work.

Pass west of altar. Kneel, project astral to pillars, say:

Father of all beings, and of the spaces, I invoke thee and I adore thee. Look with favour upon my higher aspirations, and grant unto me that my genius may manifest unto me, and in me, and through me, with a physical manifestation. Khabs am pekht. Konx om pax. Light in extension.

Return to body. Rise and go east of altar, face east.

And now, in the tremendous name of strength through suffering, Yeheshuah Yehovashah, do I crush ye down, O ye forces of evil that be beneath the universe in me, and thus do I transmute ye, that ye also may become a base and a foundation unto my higher soul, that my genius may manifest unto me physically, in me and by me, and thus also ye shall help forward the Great Work.

Pass forward to between the pillars. Arms in the form of a cross, attracting genius from above, and say:

O mighty being, the locks of whose head are formed from the divine white brilliance of the eternal crown, who art clothed with the garment of purity, and girt with the golden girdle of the sun of beauty, in whose right hand are grasped with an absolute rule the seven mighty archangels who govern the seven states of mortal man, grant unto me the power, I beseech thee, to rise above the planetary darkness wherein I must live, here on earth, until my regeneration is accomplished. Out of the darkness may light arise for me.

O thou, from whose mouth cometh the sword of flame, rend I beseech thee with that sword the veils of darkness which hide from my spirit's vision, that golden light wherein Osiris dwells, that I being thus enabled to enter the secret chamber of my own soul, may behold the glory of the eternal crown, and beholding that great light be willing to forego all that earth can offer, that I may attain unto that supernal and only self, united in the glory of Ain Soph Aour. Let me dwell in that land which far-off travellers call Naught. O land beyond honey and spice and all perfections. I will dwell therein with my lord Adonai forever.

Visualize and attract genius from above by aspiration. Vibrate the name Eheieh by the formula of the Middle Pillar, and circumambulate, and strive by all the power of the human will to exalt yourself unto the genius. Then circumambulate three times. Then return to pillars, face east, and invoke:

I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whomsoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die. I am the first and the last. I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, and hold the keys of hell and of death. For I know that my redeemer liveth and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me. I am the purified. I have passed through the gates of darkness unto light. I have fought upon earth for good, and have finished my work. I have entered into the invisible.

Circumambulate slowly once with Sol, saying as you pass round:

I am the sun in his rising, passed through the hour of cloud and of night. I am Amoun the concealed one, the opener of the day. I am Osiris Onnophris, the justified one, lord of life, triumphant over death. There is no part of me that is not of the gods. I am the preparer of the pathway, the rescuer unto the light. Out of the darkness, let the light arise.

At this point, reach the pillars again, and facing east, raise hands and eyes, and say:

I am the reconciler with the ineffable. I am the dweller of the invisible. Let the white brilliance of the divine spirit descend.

In the name and power of that divine spirit, I invoke thee, O my divine genius, that thou manifest thyself to me and in me, to help me to purify my lower self, to teach me and assist me to unite myself unto thee in divine perfection, so that I also may be built into the living rock, a pillar of the temple of my God. That I may no more come out to dwell on earth as mortal man, but that I may be as Osiris going forth to seek and to save the lost ones of the race of man.

After contemplating.

Thus at length have I been enabled to begin to comprehend the form of my higher self.

Return to west of altar, facing east.

And now in the name and power of the divine spirit, I invoke ye, ye angels of the watchtowers of the universe, and charge ye to guard this my sphere. Keep far from me the evil and the unbalanced, that they penetrate not into my abode of the mysteries. Inspire and sanctify me that I may enter in to the centre of my being, and there receive the illimitable wisdom of the light divine.

Give the signs of the $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$.

Close by purifying with water and consecrating with fire. Reverse circumambulation, adoration to east, and say:

Nothing now remains but to partake of the sacred repast composed of the elements of the body of Osiris. For Osiris Onnophris hath said: “These are the elements of my body, perfected through suffering, glorified by trial. The scent of the dying rose is as the suppressed sigh of my suffering. And the flame red fire as the strength of mine undaunted will. And the cup of wine is as the pouring forth of the blood of my heart, sacrificed unto regeneration, unto the newer life. And the bread and salt is as the foundation of my body which I destroy that it may be renewed.

Take elements astrally. Then say:

In the name of YHShVH the redeemer, I now set free any spirits that may have been imprisoned by this ceremony.

Conclude with L.V.X. signs.

5. Note by JMG: Here, “the astral” is shorthand for the astral body of the adept.

THE BORNLESS RITUAL FOR THE INVOCATION OF THE HIGHER GENIUS

Temple arranged with Banner of East and West, four Enochian tablets, with a Tablet of Union on altar with the elements arranged over it. Cross and triangle in centre. The whole ritual to be performed either with the Hierophant's sceptre or lotus wand. Z.A.M. to be clothed in white, wearing yellow slippers, white sash, and consecrated Rose Cross.

Standing west of altar, face east, and cry:

Hekas, hekas este bebeloi.

Purify the temple with water as in the $0^{\circ} = 0^{\square}$ grade.

Consecrate the temple with fire, saying appropriate versicles.

Holding lotus wand by white band, circumambulate temple three times.

Standing west of altar, face east for adoration:

Holy art thou, Lord of the Universe.

Holy art thou whom nature hath not formed.

Holy art thou, the vast and the mighty one,

Lord of the light and of the darkness.

Still facing east, perform the Qabalistic cross, formulating Kether very strongly above one's head, equilibrating it in the form of a cross. Then, aspiring to the higher genius, say:

Thee I invoke, the Bornless One.

Thee, that didst create the earth and the heavens.

Thee, that didst create the night and the day.

Thee, that didst create the darkness and the light.

Thou art Osorronophris, whom no man hath seen at any time.

Thou art Iabas. Thou art Iapos.

Thou hast distinguished between the just and the unjust.

Thou didst make the female and the male.

Thou didst produce the seed and the fruit.

Thou didst form men to love one another and to hate one another.

I am (here insert sacramental name and grade) of the order of the R.R. et A.C., thy prophet unto whom thou didst commit thy mysteries, the ceremonies of the magic of light. Thou didst produce the moist and the dry and that which nourisheth all created things. Hear me thou. For I am the angel of Paphro Osorronophris. This is thy true name, handed down to the prophets of the sun.

Pause a while to formulate about you the Banner of the East. Then make Rose Cross over altar, vibrating YHShVH by the formula of the Middle Pillar. Still facing east, but expanding the astral form to the limit of one's power, say:

The voice of my higher self said unto me, "Let me enter the path of darkness, and peradventure there shall I find the light. I am the only being in an abyss of darkness; from an abyss of darkness came I forth ere my birth, from the silence of a primal sleep." And the voice of ages answered unto my soul: "I am he who formulates in darkness, the light that shineth in darkness, yet the darkness comprehendeth it not."

Pass by north to the east of temple. Face quarter, and trace the spirit pentagram of actives and invoking pentagram of air using names as in the Supreme Ritual of the Pentagram. At the same time, imagine yourself clothed with the colossal form of the god Aroueris, and that the words of the invocation travel out infinitely to the ends of the quarter. Also imagine that the elements evoked by the pentagrams surge through the godform, eliminating all impurities.

Hear me: Ar, Thiao, Rheibet, Atheleberseth, A, Blatha, Abeu, Ebeu, Phi, Thitasoe, Ib, Thiao. Hear me, and make all spirits subject unto me, so that every spirit of the firmament and of the ether, upon the earth and under the earth, on dry land and in the water, of whirling air, and of rushing fire, and every spell and scourge of God the vast one may be obedient unto me.

Make one complete circumambulation deosil, to formulate the angle of Kether in the supernal triangle of the genius. Pass to the south, assume the astral godform of Horus, and imagine that as the invocation proceeds the fire purges you of all blemish. Use spirit pentagram of actives and invoking pentagram of fire.

I invoke thee, the terrible and invisible god who dwellest in the void place of the spirit. Arogogorobrao. Sothou. Modorio. Phalarthao. Doo. Ape. The Bornless One. Hear me, and make all spirits subject unto me, so that every spirit of the firmament and of the ether, upon the earth and under the earth, on dry land and in the water, of whirling air, and of rushing fire, and every spell and scourge of God may be obedient unto me.

Make one complete circumambulation to formulate the angle of Chokmah. Pass to west, assume form of the goddess Isis, and imagine after invocation that the element flows in waves through you. Make passive pentagram of spirit and invoking pentagram of water.

Hear me: Roubriao, Mariodam, Balbnabaoth, Assalonai, Aphnaio, I, Thoteth, Abrasar, Aeouu, Ischure, mighty and Bornless One.

Hear me, and make all spirits subject unto me, so that every spirit of the firmament and of the ether, upon the earth and under the earth, on dry land and in the water, of whirling air, and of rushing fire, and every spell and scourge of God may be obedient unto me.

Circumambulate again, forming the Binah angle. Pass to north, assume godform of Nephthys, and after invocation imagine that the earth cleanses you. Make passive pentagram of spirit and invoking pentagram of earth.

I invoke thee: Ma, Barraio, Ioel, Kotha, Athorebalo, Abraoth. Hear me, and make all spirits subject unto me, so that every spirit of the firmament and of the ether, upon the earth and under the earth, on dry land and in the water, of whirling air, and of rushing fire, and every spell and scourge of God may be obedient unto me.

Go direct to east without circumambulation. Perform Qabalistic cross.

Atoh, Malkuth, ve Geburah, ve Gedulah, le Olam, Amen. Before me Raphael, behind me Gabriel, on my right hand Michael, on my left hand Auriel. Before me flames the pentagram, and behind me shines the six-rayed star. Atoh, Malkuth, ve Geburah, ve Gedulah, le Olahm, Amen.

Pass to the west of altar and face east. Imagine yourself as clothed in the godform of Thoth. Make the Sign of the Rending of the Veil, and use the exhortation of the Portal:

Ol Sonuf Vaorsagi Goho lad Balata. Elexarpeh. Comananu. Tabitom. Zodacara Eka Zodacare Od Zodameranu. Odo Kikale Qaa, Piape Piamoel Od Vaoanu.

Make the Invoking Pentagram of Spirit active over the altar, vibrating: Exarp, Bitom, and Eheieh, and say:

Hear me: Aoth, Abaoth, Basum, Isak, Sabaoth, Isa! This is the lord of the gods. This is the Lord of the Universe. This is he whom the winds fear. This is he, who having made voice by his commandment, is lord of all things, king, ruler, and helper.

Hear me, and make all spirits subject unto me, so that every spirit of the firmament and of the ether, upon the earth and under the earth, on dry land and in the water, of whirling air, and of rushing fire, and every spell and scourge of God may be obedient unto me.

Pass to the east. Pause, then make the Passive Spirit Pentagram, with Hcoma, Nanta, and Agla. While vibrating the following words, let the Z.A.M. imagine that, standing between the pillars, he is formulated as a black egg of akasa, and that from the dark centre of that egg, its Tiphareth, extends upwards into the heights an astral semblance of his wand. As each word is vibrated let this sceptre shoot higher and higher towards the Kether of the universe. The conception should be of the formation of an astral Middle Pillar, down the centre of which the divine white brilliance may descend.

Hear me: Ieou, Pur, Iou, Pur, Iaeo, Ioou, Abrasar, Sabriam, Do, Uu, Adonai, Ede, Edu, Angelos Ton Theon, Anlala Lai, Gaia, Ape, Diathana Thorun.

Above the lotus of the sceptre, the Z.A.M. should now see the divine white brilliance clearly, formulated as a flashing angelic figure descending upon the black egg. Say:

He comes in the power of the light.

He comes in the light of wisdom.

He comes in the mercy of the light.

The light hath healing in its wings.

Aspiring and imagining the while that the flower at the top of the wand grows and opens wider that the genius may enter, make L.V.X. signs in silence, and say very slowly:

I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die. I am the first and I am the last. I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore, and hold the keys of hell and of death.

For I know that my redeemer liveth and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me. I am the purified. I have passed through the gates of darkness unto light. I have fought upon earth for good, and have now finished my work. I have entered into the invisible.

I am the sun in his rising, passed through the hour of cloud and of night. I am Amoun, the concealed one, the opener of the day. I am Osiris Onnophris, the justified one, lord of life, triumphant over death. There is no part of me that is not of the gods. I am the preparer of the pathway, the rescuer unto the light

Now let the Z.A.M. formulate the descent of the light into the flower. Then pause, and say this prayer:

Unto thee, sole wise, sole mighty, and sole eternal one, be praise and glory forever, who hath permitted me, who now kneeleth humbly before thee, to penetrate thus far into the sanctuary of thy mysteries. Not unto me, but unto thy name be the glory. Let the influence of thy divine ones descend upon my head, and teach me the value of self-sacrifice, so that I shrink not in the hour of trial, but that my name may be written on high, and that my genius may stand in the presence of the holy ones, in that hour when the Son of Man is invoked before the lord of spirits and his name in the presence of the Ancient of Days.

After this prayer, circumambulate three times, and then formulate the flashing descent of the supernal light down the astral shaft into the Tiphareth centre, and that the black egg surrounding the Z.A.M. gradually becomes illumined, until it changes into white.

Out of the darkness, let that light arise. Before I was blind, but now I see. I am the dweller in the invisible, the reconciler with the ineffable.

Let the Z.A.M. make the L.V.X. signs as described in the Rose Cross Ritual, so that as he makes, finally, the X sign, he calls down the light.

Let the white brilliance of the divine spirit descend.

When the Z.A.M. has felt the brilliance and perceived the radiance of the egg, let him withdraw the shaft into his heart, and say:

I am he, the Bornless Spirit, having sight in the feet, strong, and the immortal fire.

I am he, the truth.

I am he who hate that evil should be wrought in the world.

I am he that lighteneth and thundereth.

I am he from whom is the shower of the life of earth.

I am he, whose mouth ever flameth.

I am he, the begetter and manifester unto the light.

I am he, the grace of the world.

The Heart Girt with a Serpent is my name.

Come thou forth and follow me, and make all spirits subject unto me, so that every spirit of the firmament and of the ether, upon the earth and under the earth, on dry land and in the water, of whirling air, and of rushing fire, and every spell and scourge of God the vast one may be obedient unto me. I.A.O. Sabao. Such are the words.

After contemplating that glory for some while go to west of altar and face east.

Be my mind open to the higher.

Be my heart a centre of the light.

Be my body a temple of the Rose Cross.

Then banish by pentagram ritual or:

“In the name of YHShVH, I now set free any spirits that may have been imprisoned by this ceremony.”

REQUIEM

Arrangement of the temple as in Neophyte grade. Opening by watchtower ceremony. Circumambulation thrice, and then the adoration.

Go to the east with lotus wand, held by white band, and perform the Invoking Ritual of the Supernals by the Hexagram. Trace sigils in the air as they are vibrated.

Supernal splendour which dwellest in the light to which no man can approach, wherein is mystery and depth unthinkable, and awful silence. I beseech thee who art Shekinah and Aimah Elohim, to look down upon me in this ceremony which I perform to thine honour, and for the assistance of those who have passed through the veil. Grant thine aid unto the highest aspirations of my soul, in thy divine name YHVH Elohim by which thou dost reveal thyself as the perfection of creation and the light of the world to come.

I implore thee to grant unto me the presence of thine archangel Tzaphkiel. O Tzaphkiel, thou prince of spiritual initiation through suffering and of strife against evil, aid me I beseech thee to transcend the evil that is in me, so that I may be enabled to perform a higher and diviner work.

O ye strong and mighty ones of the sphere of Shabbathai, O ye Aralim, Aralim, I conjure ye by the mighty name of YHVH Elohim, the divine ruler of your realm, and by the name of Tzaphkiel, your archangel. Aid me with your power, in your office to place a veil between me and all things belonging to the outer and lower world. Let it be a veil woven from that silent darkness which surrounds your abode of eternal rest, that in this chamber of the divine mystery, I may hear nothing that comes not from on high, and see naught that may distract my vision from the ineffable glory of the supernals. Grant unto me, I beseech thee, the power of the spirit to bring the brilliance of the eternal splendour to one who has now entered the invisible. Lift me, I beseech thee, lift me up so that I may be made a divine messenger bearing the peace and harmony of higher spheres to (insert name), whose death to this earthly plane we do now commemorate. Wherever he may now be, and on whatever plane he may now pursue his ideal, let him be blessed with a diviner rest and an utter cessation from strife.

Trace Saturn hexagram with sigil in centre.

Term of all that liveth, whose name is death and inscrutable, be thou favourable unto us in thine hour. And unto him, from whose mortal eyes the veil of physical life hath fallen, grant that there may be the accomplishment of his true will. Should he will absorption in the infinite or to be united with his chosen and preferred or to be in contemplation or to be at peace or to achieve the labour and heroism of incarnation on this planet or another or in any star, or aught else, unto him may there be granted the accomplishment of his true will.

Go to altar, visualize deceased at the east facing west, and invoke:

I invoke thee by the divine name I.A.O., thou great angel Hru, who art set over the operations of this secret wisdom. Strengthen and establish (insert name) in his search for the divine light. Increase his spiritual perception so that he may accomplish his true will, and that thus he may be enabled to rise beyond that lower selfhood which became as nothing unto that highest selfhood which is the clear light of the spirit.

Go to east of altar. Make Rose Cross over the elements vibrating the Enochian spirit invocation. Make Qabalistic cross.

For Osiris Onnophris who is found perfect before the gods hath said: These are the elements of my body, perfected through suffering, glorified through trial. The scent of the dying rose is as the repressed sigh of my suffering. And the flame-red fire as the energy of mine undaunted will. And the cup of wine is the pouring out of the blood of my heart, sacrificed unto regeneration, unto the newer life. And the bread and salt are as the foundations of my body, which I destroy in order that they may be renewed.

For I am Osiris triumphant. Even Osiris Onnophris the justified one. I am he who is clothed with the body of flesh yet in whom flames the spirit of the eternal gods. I am the lord of life. I am triumphant over death, and whosoever partaketh with me shall with me arise. I am the manifester in matter of those whose abode is the invisible. I am the purified. I stand upon the universe. I am its reconciler with the eternal gods. I am the perfecter of matter, and without me the universe is not.

Pause for a moment or two, visualizing Kether as a brilliance above the head.

Buried with that light in a mystical death, rising again in a mystical resurrection, cleansed and purified through him our master, O thou dweller of the invisible. Like him, thou pilgrim of the ages, hast thou toiled. Like him hast thou suffered tribulation. Poverty, torture, and death hast thou passed through. They have been but the purification of the gold. In the alembic of thine heart, through the athanor of affliction, seek thou the true stone of the wise.

Pass from the altar to the east.

Come in peace, O beautiful and divine one, to a body glorified and perfected. Herald of the gods, knowing his speech among the living! Pass thou through every region of the invisible unto the place wherein thy genius dwelleth, because thou comest in peace, provided with thy wealth. Dwell thou in that sacred land that far-off travellers call Naught. O land beyond honey and spice and all perfection! Dwell therein with thy lord Adonai forever.

Turn and look westwards, raising eyes.

O Lord of the Universe, the vast and the mighty one, ruler of the light and the darkness, we adore thee and we invoke thee. Look thou with favour upon this pilgrim who is now before thee, and grant thine aid unto the highest aspirations of his soul, to the glory of the ineffable name.

Slowly walk to the altar, visualizing the brilliance descend upon the image of the deceased in the place of the Neophyte.

I come in the power of the light. I come in the light of wisdom. I come in the mercy of the light. The light hath healing in its wings. (name deceased), I tell thee that as the light can manifest from the darkness so by these rites shall the light descend unto thee. Long hast thou dwelt in darkness. Quit the darkness and seek the light.

Return to between the pillars, and visualize the descent of the brilliance above.

I am the resurrection and the life. Whosoever believeth on me though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die. I am the first and the last. I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore, and hold the keys of hell and of death. For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me. I am the purified. I have passed through the gates of darkness unto light. I have fought upon earth for good, and have finished my work. I have entered into the invisible.

Vibrate Yeheshuah by the vibratory formula of the Middle Pillar. Also the mystical circumambulation. Then, walk round slowly whilst saying:

I am the sun in his rising, passed through the hour of cloud and of night. I am Amoun the concealed one, the opener of the day. I am Osiris Onnophris the justified one, lord of life, triumphant over death. There is no part of me which is not of the gods. I am the preparer of the pathway, the rescuer unto the light. Out of the darkness, let the light arise.

Pass between the pillars, face east.

I am the reconciler with the ineffable, the dweller of the invisible. Let the white brilliance of the divine spirit descend.

Visualize the deceased now standing well in front in the east, and address him thus:

(Insert name), whoever thou art in reality, and wheresoever thou now mayest be, by the power of the spirit devolving upon me by this ceremony, I do project unto thee this ray of the divine white brilliance that it may bring thee peace and happiness and rest.

Make the Sign of the Enterer three times to project the light.

Be thy mind open unto the higher. Be thy heart a centre of the light. Be thy body, whatsoever its nature, a temple of the Holy Spirit.

Pause. Make Qabalistic cross.

Unto Thee, sole wise, sole eternal, and sole merciful one, be the praise and the glory forever, who has permitted (insert name), who now standeth invisibly and humbly before Thee, to enter thus far into the sanctuary of Thy mystery. Not unto us but unto Thy name be the glory. Let the influence of Thy divine ones descend upon his head, and teach him the value of self-sacrifice so that he shrink not in the hour of trial. But that thus his name may be written upon high and his genius stand in the presence of the holy ones, in that hour when the Son of Man is invoked before the Lord of Spirits and his name in the presence of the Ancient of Days.

Go to altar.

And now in the name and power of the divine spirit, I invoke ye, ye angels of the watchtowers of the universe, and charge ye by the divine names Yeheshuah Yehovashah to guard this sphere of (insert name). Keep far from him all evil and the unbalanced that they penetrate not into his spiritual abode. Inspire and sanctify him so that he may enter in to the centre of his being and there receive the vision of the clear light, and thus accomplish his true will.

Pause for some while for meditation. Then close by usual formulae.

PRACTICAL Z. PREPARATION FOR DIVINATION

By G.H. Frater Sub Spe

The preparation for divination—opening ceremony of $0^\circ = 0^\square$. The temple is the aura or Sphere of Sensation. The Hierophant is the diviner, the positive active will which manipulates and controls all the other bodily functions, and all the forces operating in the aura.

Sitting in as comfortable a position as possible, close the eyes, and begin to fix attention on the pole star and circumpolar constellations, endeavouring to visit each prominent star and then to pass from one to another. Then, in the same way to visit the south polar constellations. Then to be conscious of both simultaneously as one might be of head and feet. In this way the astral grew gradually colossal, and the sensation arose of being outside of, and in fact containing, the whole starry universe. The earth had become a mere insignificant speck. The sense of human form was wholly lost, but there was a sense of up and down, and of the pole of a spherical aura.

Endeavoured to place this so as to correspond with the centre of Draco, the Kether of the starry sphere. This caused a more definite idea of the sphere and of the Sephiroth and paths therein, and the belt of the zodiac coloured of a hollow sphere or magic circle, wherein a blinding white light was in the place of Kether, and thick darkness on Malkuth. Stood immediately in front of Kether and realized that the blackness of Malkuth guarded the sphere from evil and sub-human forces, the Qlippoth, or on this spiritual plane, the bondage to the material. Endeavoured to formulate this black darkness into a giant guardian, realizing also that it was my own negative will saying, “Thus far, and no further.”

In front of this guardian which I perceived, was the reflection of my own material universe, i.e., everything I was or could possibly be conscious of in the body, “All thoughts, all passions, all delights—whatsoever stirs this mortal frame,” but only the reflection thereof as in a mirror, and having therefore no power to move the spiritual consciousness. The form was a square of earth cast in the form of a double cube answering to the tenth Sephirah, for every possible thought or emotion of the body, however lofty, was represented there, even to the highest spiritual aspirations, all dominated by the white triangle of the triune God and the red cross of self-sacrifice.

I then realized that even the reflection of my own universe, including my very thoughts and aspirations in the body, stood without a colossal portal of a temple, my spiritual will being within, and the shadowy portal grew up between the perceiving consciousness and the perceived universe. Two vast pillars of positive and negative, the eternal contraries, were the gateway; and the pure white of equilibrium and eternal silence was between them. My spiritual conscious will now advanced as it were below the centre of its sphere, near to that point of equilibrium so as to survey through the Portal of the Pillars the reflection of my own universe.

Fixing myself there as immovable—because eternally right, being dominated only by the forces of the eternal God, my lower nature lay before me as it were, mapped out. In front the great portal shutting out all that had not attained to, and retained, perfect equilibrium, beyond and as far distant from the point of equilibrium as my own consciousness, was my evil self, the root of all evil. And I was now conscious in that past which was the root of all good. And thus again an equilibrium was preserved between the pillars. At an equal distance again beyond this evil self were the reflection of the perceived universe, formulated as the cubical altar whereon were the symbols of the elements and the triangle and cross, and beyond this the dark and threatening black figure of the great guardian of the west. Furthermore, from my right hand came the cool influence of moisture, from my left the warmth of fire, and from the moist warmth at the point of equilibrium sprang the idea of generation, birth, growth, and development which forces were directed upon the cubical altar, bringing the forces of life into my universe.

Yet—all this was myself. I realized that far beyond the possibilities of bodily thought there were in myself forces, powers, and knowledge far transcending all that the body can ever perceive or imagine in its loftiest flights. In this manner I was able to order and direct the forces of the intellectual brain—the Kerux, Anubis, the “watcher without” being the conscious intellectual brain which thinks and acts in the material body.

The watcher within, the higher intuitive intellect whose workings are mostly unconscious to the material man. Recognizing now the importance of maintaining this exalted attitude and preventing the entrance of any material and mundane thoughts, my spiritual will ordered the logical intellect, by will-force rather than definite thought, to clear the temple, and the intellect bearing a ray of white light from the supreme and lighted by the lamp of wisdom commanded all material things to stand aloof. Then and not till then the spiritual will, which now seemed to be myself, began to function. It initiated a current of force and commanded the higher intuitional intellect to see that the sphere was properly closed against material thoughts. This was accomplished by a communication between the intuitional intelligence and the physical logical brain, the latter keeping guard over the material body (by this time almost forgotten, its cerebrations having become unconscious).

The spiritual will now directs the guardian of the west to make sure that all forces operating are forces of good, and in obedience to the spiritual will, whose controlling force is the ineffable power of God himself. This is done by every force treading down the evil and invoking and bringing forward the light into the material. The sensation here should be that every force in the sphere of sensation is in unity and affirming the will of God.

A certain equilibrium having thus been established, the whole sphere of sensation should be vitalized by the vibratory formula of the Middle Pillar. The sensation is that the consciousness which is in the spiritual will draws in a deep inspiration of divine power from the supreme hierarchy, and by an effort of will sends it down to the guardian of the west, whence it rushes forth in strength and power, vitalizing the genius of equilibrium between the pillars, and thence the whole sphere. The attention is then fixed on each force in turn, now alive and clothed with a definite symbolic form. In this it is desirable to use the forms of the gods of Egypt, so as to avoid the chance of illusion through memory creeping in by the appearance of the human officers one is accustomed to see. Each of these considered in detail assumes a symbolic form.

Note, that as the present purpose is to examine the reflection of some earthly event or force, the symbology is particularly regarded with reference thereto. Thus the Hiereus specially guards against the intrusion of any material wish or thought or emotion which might disturb the perfect calm of the divining mind. The Dadouchos is not alone the power of heat and dryness but of energy, fire, passion, impetuous zeal; and Stolistes is not alone cold or moisture, but pleasure, love, luxury, etc. In fact the forces of wands and cups. The fiery zeal prepares the way for the prayer which rises from the soul like incense, this prayer being related also to the suffering which is the purification by fire.

The receptive and negative forces of the cup are those which develop the perception of the symbology of the various forces. The intuitive intellect (Anubis, the watcher within) regulates the imaginative forming of the sphere of sensation itself—guides the formulated movements thereof—keeps alive the light of occult science and grasps the ray of divine wisdom. So the genius of equilibrium, Thmaah, must introduce the question to be investigated, for unless this be done by perfect equilibrium no good result can be attained.

I now felt every force moved by my own higher intuition, directed by the spiritual will. All thoughts of earth were lost altogether, and only the great forces were perceived, which might produce a material result, but that result was not perceptible. Unless this result is attained at this stage, I have found it useless to go further. I next endeavoured to mark the limits of the sphere of sensation by the consecrations of fire and water. Now a complete establishment of calm and passive equilibrium in the sphere was required, and the formulation of a vortex to draw in the highest spiritual influences. I therefore directed, as in the $0^\circ = 0^\square$, the circumambulation of these mighty forces, as it were, a great wheel which set revolving, whose centre was the point of silence, the throne of Harpacrat. The whole sphere then adored the Lord of the Universe.

At this stage I found that I could formulate the figure of a terrestrial globe in the place of the altar, and fixing the attention on any point of the surface, get a mental picture of what was transpiring there, recognizing at the same time that it took place by the action and reaction of the great forces which moved by the will of God and were therefore in all things perfectly good. This rendered impossible any feeling of joy or sorrow at any event, any hope or any fear, any affection for any individual, or any antipathy. The desire to know became simply a desire to be associated in the knowledge of God and therefore so far united to him.

Unless this stage is reached at this point, earthly thoughts have intruded, the temple has not been properly cleansed and guarded, and according to my experience no true results can be expected. If this result is attained the process may then be sealed, and the divination may proceed.

BOOK SEVEN

Clairvoyance, Talismans,
Sigils, Etc.

CLAIRVOYANCE ¹

“The subject of clairvoyance must always be in the highest degree interesting to all who are aspiring after Adeptship even in its lowest grades. ... We frequently meet with two opposite attitudes towards the subject, both in the outer world and amongst our junior members. Both these attitudes are hindrances to its proper study, and therefore I shall preface my remarks by a few words concerning each of them.

“The first is fear of clairvoyance. And the second is a disproportionate estimate of its value.

“Both of these attitudes arise from a misunderstanding of its true character. People imagine that somehow the power of clairvoyance is obtained secondhand from the powers of evil; or that its exercise will bring those who practice it under their influence. Or, on the other hand, they imagine that the power of clairvoyance will save them a great deal of trouble, and give them a short and easy path to the information and guidance they desire. In fact, that these may almost be attained at will. Nay more, would such a power not fully satisfy that curiosity which is one of the pitfalls of the superficial student?

“The properly trained clairvoyant need have no fear that he will thereby expose himself to the powers of evil. It is the untrained natural clairvoyant who is in danger. Training will give him knowledge, discipline, and protection, such as will protect him from the onslaught of the averse powers.

“On the other hand, let him who desires to save himself trouble and to gain knowledge to which he has no claim, be very well assured that only ‘in the sweat of his brow’ can he obtain this power and exercise it in security. And that he who seeks to gratify his curiosity will either be mortified by disappointment or distressed by discoveries he would much prefer not to have made. Trained, humble, and reverent clairvoyance is a great gift, opening up new worlds and deeper truths, lifting us out of ourselves into the great inpouring and outpouring of the heart of God.” ²

The earliest experiments in clairvoyance as taught by the Order are with the tattwa symbols. These, with their traditional names, significances, symbols, and colours are:

Akasa—Ether or Spirit.	Symbol: black or indigo egg.
Vayu—Air.	Symbol: a sky-blue disc or circle.
Tejas—Fire.	Symbol: a red equilateral triangle.
Apas—Water.	Symbol: a silver crescent.
Prithivi—Earth.	Symbol: a yellow square or cube. ¹⁶⁸

³In brief, the traditional occult concept of the tattwa is that of a vital current of ether or force—the Hindu pranas—which issues in a steady stream from the sun. That stream is fivefold, and flows around our Earth, vitalizing its astral substance or its sphere of sensation. In short, they are the currents of sub-planes of the Astral Light. The theory has it that the element of Akasa is strongest at dawn, when the sun rises, and its power continues for the space of two hours, when its force subsides and glides into Vayu, air. This also persists or is in course for the same period. Each tattwa or current of force is believed to exist strongly for this length of time, each merging at the end into the succeeding tattwa in the order given above. After the current of Prithivi is exhausted, the cycle recommences with Akasa and continues in the same order again and for the same periods.

As no element on our plane can exist in an unmixed form, but contains within itself the constituents of all the others, or possesses several grades or planes of its own substance, so each tattwa is subdivided into five divisions, currents, or planes. Akasa of Akasa, Spirit of Spirit, would be the most tenuous and purest form of that element, the integral nature of spirit—its highest essence. Vayu of Akasa would refer to its airy quality; Tejas of Akasa to its fiery and dynamic aspect; Apas of Akasa, its fluidic and watery phase, while Prithivi of Akasa, its most terrestrial phase, or that aspect of its power which more nearly than the others contacts the earth. The same fivefold division, in the same fivefold order, applies equally to the other elements.

The student is strongly urged to make these symbols and have a set of them with him for working. The primary or simple tattwa should be made about two or two and a half inches in height. It is recommended that coloured papers be used rather than water colours, since the brilliance of the former is much greater than the latter. The lacquer paints which are now easily obtainable may also be used to good effect. If the symbols are cut from coloured papers, they should be pasted on clean unused cards length upwards. The method of indicating a sub-tattwa, or a charged or compound tattwa, is to paint or paste upon the principal symbol a smaller symbol of the charge or sub-element. Thus, in the case of Tejas of Prithivi, fire of earth, Prithivi which is the major symbol should be made about two and a half inches square, whilst the red triangle, each angle about half an inch long, should be pasted in the centre of the larger symbol. It is a useful preliminary also to write on the back of the card the appropriate divine and angelic names.

The method of using these tattwa symbols for clairvoyance is a simple one. My remarks in the following example will refer to the element of Prithivi, earth, the yellow square, and what is said of this will apply equally well to the remaining symbols. Though the method is simple, it is far from foolproof, and the description of it should be read several times.

The student should be calm and quiet and, sitting in his chair, take the card bearing the symbol of the yellow square in his hand and gaze intently at it for about twenty seconds. Quickly transferring his attention from the symbol to any white surface, such as the ceiling or a sheet of paper at his side especially provided for the purpose, he will see, by reflex optical action, the same shape but in a direct complementary colour. This will be a sort of luminous lavender-blue or pale translucent mauve. The actual tint of this complementary colour will depend wholly on the depth of the yellow used in the first place, as well as upon the lighting conditions prevailing at the time of the experiment.

Immediately this mauve square is seen, the student should close his eyes and endeavour to visualize in imagination this mauve square as standing before him. This clearly perceived by the mind's eye, let the student at once imagine that it enlarges itself, becoming an object large enough for him to pass through. The next step is to imagine that he is actually passing through this square, as though it were a door. The best method of doing this is to employ the Neophyte sign, the Sign of the Enterer, which is that of "groping for light." It is essentially a projecting sign, and the effect should be of having projected himself through this door or gateway. It is recommended that the student rise to his feet at this juncture and, still visualizing the enlarged square (with closed eyes of course), perform this Sign of Horus physically and, believing himself through it, sit down ready to commence the vision.

One of the other instructions puts it thus: "First meditate on the element selected, soak yourself in it till, if it be fire, you feel hot; if water, wet, and so on, all the time coordinating the symbol with your sensations. Then, laying aside the symbol and closing your eyes, endeavour to project and enlarge that symbol before you, regarding it as a gateway through which you are to pass. ... Deliberately will to pass through the gateway. Let him imagine that he can hear it close behind him."

Yet another version, this time written by D.D.C.F.,⁴ says: "Keep up the design, form, and colour in the Akasic aura, as clearly as they appeared in material form to the outward seeing. Transfer the vital effort from the optic nerve to the mental perception, or thought-seeing as distinct from the seeing with the eye. Let one form of apprehension glide on into the other. Produce the reality of the dream vision by positive will in the waking state. ... Then maintaining your abstraction from your surroundings, still concentrated upon the symbol and its correlated ideas, you are to seek a perception of a scene or panorama or view of the plane. This may also be brought on by a sense of tearing open, as a curtain is drawn aside, and seeing the ‘within’ of the symbol before you.”

The principal idea is to imagine the symbol, in its complementary colour, as a door and to pass through it. Having imagined that there has been a passing through the door, and clearly realizing, in this instance, the mauve square behind him, the seer should make an effort to look about him. Let him endeavour to see objects, entities, or some sort of landscape. Most always these take the form of pale stilled pictures, seen as it were with the mind or the eye of imagination. Hillocks, meadows, rocks, vast brown boulders may be seen, and what is most important, there should be a strong sense of being within the element; the seer should understand, as he has never quite realized before, the true nature, the “feel” of earth.

Before aught else occurs, the divine names appropriate to that element should now be vibrated, beginning with the deity name. The student should vibrate each slowly and audibly several times. Thus, he would vibrate Adonai ha-Aretz, three or four times, then the name of Auriel the archangel of earth, followed by the name of Phorlakh the angel of earth. These will usually suffice though the Hebrew name of the element and cardinal quarter may also be employed. Various changes may now be perceived to occur to the landscape; it will become alive, vivified and dynamic, and the sense of the element should become even more clearly and vividly defined.

Also a being may appear, one whose characteristics pertain to the element of earth, and his garments, their colours, and his other ornaments should be in the appropriate colours. Under no circumstances should the seer wander from his doorway alone; he should always wait until one of these elemental beings or “guides” appears, and he should continue vibrating the names until one does appear, or until he obtains the sense that one is present. Sometimes, and with some students, there is no clear vision of these occurrences or beings, but only a sense or intuition or powerful instinct that such and such a thing is happening, and that such a type of being has appeared. This often is more trustworthy than the use of sight or other sense.

The guide, having made his appearance, is to be tested by every means at the seer's disposal. First of all, it is well to assume the sign of the grade to which that element is referred. In this instance, the sign of the Zelator should be made, by physically as well as astrally raising the right arm to an angle of forty-five degrees. The guide should answer this with the same sign or another which is unmistakable proof that he belongs to the element and has been sent to act as guide. If there is deception, these signs will cause him distress or at once the vision will break up or the false guide will disappear. He should also be asked clearly and deliberately whether he comes to act as guide in the name of the appropriate deity name. If all this strikes the seer as satisfactory, and his doubts settled, let him follow the guide to wherever he is being led, carefully noting whither he goes, and asking questions about the element or whatever he sees.

A very important thing is here to be noted. On these subtler planes, or within the realms of these symbols, form takes on symbolic implication which we, on Earth, have obscured if not lost. It is only human beings who swathe themselves in garments whose shape and colour bear no relation to their true character. "Even on our own plane, the clothing of animals is pregnant with meaning, and on the astral plane this is far more emphatically the case. An elemental may, for some purpose of its own, masquerade for a time in alien garb, but we are given a certain definite procedure to follow in dealing with them."

The signs of the elemental grades, the vibration of divine and angelic names, and the tracing of appropriate pentagrams are symbols which powerfully affect these elemental inhabitants of the astral and prevent or disclose deception. It is but rarely that there will be necessity to resort to anything so drastic as the pentagrams in these tattwa visions, for the vibration of the Hebrew name either of the element or of the archangel will restore order and harmony. The true form, colour, clothing, even adornments such as jewels and embroideries are consonant to the element and character of the beings under discussion. And unless they are, the seer may be sure he is being imposed on and should act accordingly—at once. In a short while, after only a few astral experiences, these symbolic ideas will have been sufficiently familiar to the student to enable him at once to detect error or imposition.

In the event of employing a charged or compound tattwa such as, let us assume, fire of earth, indicated by a red triangle within a larger yellow square, it may happen that the seer may find himself being escorted from one guide to another and passed from one plane to another. The same test should be applied, and not the slightest loophole should be left for the entry of even the smallest incongruous item. The divine names of the secondary tattwa should be vibrated, and the grade sign attributed to it should be assumed. Only when fully satisfied, and he must never permit himself to be easily satisfied, should the seer proceed. If the first guide be left behind, he must be accorded courtesy of farewell. “Always treat these beings with courtesy and in accord with their rank. Pay deference to the superior orders, the archangels, angels, and rulers. To those of lower rank, bear yourself as an equal; and to those lower still, as to servants whom you treat politely, but do not allow familiarity. Elementals pure and simple, such as fairies, gnomes, and so on, must be treated with firmness and decision, as they are often mischievous and irresponsible, even though free from malice.” It is also said to be a good practice, since form is symbolic in these regions, to imagine yourself as large as possible, always taller than the being confronting you; and under every circumstance maintain self-control and fearless demeanour.

At first, and for the first half-a-dozen experiments, the student should be content with the simple observation of the landscape and, if possible, the type of guide who appears in answer to the names. At the beginning it is more important to acquire facility in passing through these symbolic doors than in acquiring impressive visions. The seer will find himself on the right track if he is content, for quite some little time, with a glimpse of a hill, a cave, an underground hall, or an angel of the element, and so on, returning after the brief visit. With facility acquired, he may stay in the vision for a longer period, which should be relatively full of incident and action, and should impart no little knowledge.

The method of leaving the tattwa and returning to Earth is the precise reversal of the initial process. After thanking the guide and bidding him farewell, the seer should retrace his footsteps to the symbolic door—the purple or lavender-blue square. It is insisted that this return should be made as definite as possible. That is, there should be no sudden departure from the place and finding oneself back in one's normal state of mind. The seer will be wise if he carefully follows the passage he has walked through, even if it has been a very long way, the reason being that it is well to keep the two states of consciousness, the two planes, quite distinct from one another. There should be no merging of the elemental plane into the plane of everyday consciousness, and the best way of ensuring this is to make both coming and going follow a definite and distinct technique. After having found your way back to the door, you pass through it, again with the Sign of the Enterer, and return to your body. At once stand up, and make physically and firmly the Sign of Silence, raising the left forefinger to the lips, and stamping with the right foot. Always note that the first Sign of the Enterer is answered and followed by the Sign of Silence.

It is not well to repeat these experiments too frequently at first; some advise an interval of several days between them, for the first few months of one's efforts in this direction. But when performed, the seer should make every effort to avoid self-delusion and deception. He should be alert the whole time and never embark on these experiments when tired or not physically well. At the least threat of incoherence, or the entry of incongruous symbols or elements into the vision, the names, signs, and symbols should be repeated.

Thus and thus alone may he hope to avoid delusion. These planes are a source of untold danger to whosoever is not able to take them with the proverbial grain of salt. Flattery, which is one of the most frequent types of delusion encountered and the most common source of trouble, should be avoided like the plague. Madness lies that way, and I cannot stress too strongly that vanity should be wholly discarded and flattery eschewed.

During his adventures, the seer should endeavour to describe carefully and in full detail the landscape of the vision. He should discover if possible the special attributes and nature of that plane, the type of its inhabitants—spiritual, elemental, and so on; the plants, animals, and minerals which would correspond to its nature; the operation of its influence upon man, animals, plants, and minerals here.

The process of working by placing the symbol upon the forehead, instead of imaginatively passing through it, is not a good practice. S.R.M.D.⁵ claims that it is liable to derange the brain circulation and cause mental illusions and disturbance, headache and nervous exhaustion. It is also necessary to avoid self-hypnotism, for this would dispose towards mediumship and make the seer the playground of forces. The seer at all costs must control and not permit himself to be controlled. If in danger at any time, or should he feel that he cannot accommodate the forces of the vision to his will or that his self-control is breaking, he should resort to the vibration of the names and then retire from the vision.

By continuing these practices for a long period of time, the inner clairvoyance will develop, and with perseverance the visions will grow from vague indeterminate pictures, hardly distinguishable from imaginative concepts, to vivid powerful experiences. But even when these do occur he should under no circumstances accept them on their face value or neglect his tests, for the whole astral plane, apparently, seeks to delude the seer, and if he opens himself by neglecting the tests, he is lost. With considerable practice, too, the symbols may be discarded, for they will not be required to give entrance to the planes, though for the beginner no attempt should be made to work without the use of the actual material symbol. It will be found wisest to keep as much to the physical plane as possible by employing the physical symbols and by making the appropriate signs and steps with the physical body, as well as by speaking audibly and describing the vision as it proceeds.

When the student has become fairly proficient with the use of simple tattwas, he should experiment with the compound tattwas, and not be satisfied with his ability to skry until he is perfectly familiar with every part of the planes represented by those symbols. Then he can devise further experiments with other symbols. The use of the element Akasa, the indigo egg, was in the Order usually postponed until entry had been obtained into the Second Order. The reason for this was that no traditional names are provided for use with this symbol as with the other four, and the student must discover or devise his own. As has already been described at length, the entrance into these subtle planes is obtained by means of the divine names, the rule being to invoke the highest names known by the seer. Any student who has studied the Adeptus Minor ceremony and the Ritual of the Pentagram will realize what names are required for use with this symbol of Akasa. Eheieh, Agla, Yeheshuah, and Eth will be the general names for the simple tattwa, and the compound or charged Akasa cards will demand the use of the names from the Enochian Tablet of Union.

It will be found a good plan to prepare cards of the geomantic symbols painted in their appropriate colours, for these make perfect “doors” through which the seer can pass. And while these symbols are also attributed to the elements, the vision acquired from the geomantic symbols using the names of the appropriate rulers and genii will be quite distinct in character from those of the tattwa cards. The Hebrew letters, the tarot cards and sigils, the planetary and zodiacal signs, and sigils of every description may be used to yield the symbolic door to a subtle plane. A vast new field of knowledge is thus opened up. The names appropriate to each of these symbols are given in these papers, which should be carefully studied by the student. And he should remember that the formula of the employment of the divine names and signs applies equally to these other symbols as they did to the tattwa cards.

There was a good deal of glib parlance within the Order as to “astral vision” and “etheric vision.” The former was described as the ordinary tattwa vision, in which objects and landscapes, though vivid and alive, are yet “flat” as though reflected on a mirror, rather like a cinematograph film. “In this form of descrying, note that you see objects reversed, as to right and left, for which suitable allowance must be made.” The use of the phrase “mirror-like vision” is actually a very adequate description. Yet this is capable, as development proceeds, of merging into another type of vision—a full-blooded clairvoyance, in which things and people are seen in three dimensions, and as though the seer were not merely watching the scene, but were actually in it. Some explained that as “etheric vision” although the actual Order documents describe this as the clairvoyance ensuing from astral projection. Greatly Honoured Frater D.D.C.F. states: “If instead of this simple vision a ray of yourself is sent out and actually goes to the place (astral projection) there is not necessarily the sense of reversal of objects. ... Scenes, things, instead of being like pictures, have the third dimension, solidity; they stand out like bas-relief, then haut-relief, then you see as from a balloon, as it is said, by a bird’s-eye view. You feel to go to the place, to descend upon it, to step out upon the scene, and to be an actor there.” The same rules laid down for the simpler method of slaying should be followed here, and always the highest divine names should be used and constant tests applied. The paper which follows this, dealing with skrying and astral projection by V.N.R.,⁶ will explain the process a little more fully by means of setting forth an example of its working.

Another technique, making use of this faculty, was described in a paper recording a lecture by Frater Sub Spe. The idea was to reread the rituals, and then endeavour to retread the paths astrally. One example given was that the seer should formulate in imagination a vast pylon, and within its gates he should visualize the Hebrew letter Tau, the thirty-second Path. This should be preceded by a study of the ritual of the Theoricus grade, especially of the rite of the Kerubic stations. Then, imagining himself passing through this letter Tau and entering the pylon, he should proceed to make the appropriate pentagrams and hexagrams, and vibrating the divine names appropriate to that plane. The resulting vision should be similar to the passage of the path in the ceremony, but whereas this latter was purely symbolic, the former may be real and dynamic, and may develop into an initiation in the true sense of the word. The same technique may be applied to every Path and to every Sephirah.

Developing still further from this, there is another practice which passes beyond mere clairvoyance, though making use of it. This is called rising on the planes and is a spiritual process after spiritual conceptions and higher aims. "By concentration and contemplation of the divine, you formulate a Tree of Life passing from you to the spiritual realms above and beyond yourself. Picture to yourself that you stand in Malkuth, then by the use of the divine names and aspiration, you strive upwards by the Path of Tau towards Yesod, neglecting the crossing rays which attract you as you pass up. Look upwards to the divine light shining downward from Kether upon you. From Yesod leads upwards the Path of Samekh, Temperance; the arrow, cleaving upwards, leads the way to Tiphareth, the great central sun." D.D.C.F. also suggests that, having risen to Tiphareth, the adept skryer should formulate to himself that he is bound to a cross, exactly as occurred in the Adeptus Minor ceremony, and by invoking the great angel Hua beseech help and guidance in the pathway of light. By this method, he may more easily ascend the planes which lead to the glory of the crown. Thus formulating in the imagination the different parts of the Tree of Life, and vibrating the god names appropriate to the Sephiroth or Paths, the seer may find himself, if his aspiration is sincere and keen, rising towards the spiritual light, bathed in that golden glory of effulgence which is continuously shed from above.

Though it may seem rather out of place to quote Aleister Crowley here, yet he has written things in his Magick on this subject that are so very important that I am impelled to quote them here for the benefit of the student. The important drill practices, in his belief, are:

“1. The fortification of the Body of Light by the constant use of rituals, by the assumption of godforms, and by the right use of the Eucharist.

“2. The purification and consecration and exaltation of that body by the use of rituals of invocation.

“3. The education of that body by experience. It must learn to travel on every plane; to break down every obstacle which may confront it.”

In a footnote to the above, he has appended a footnote which I reproduce herewith:

“The aspirant should remember that he is a microcosm. ‘Universus sum et Nihil universi a me alienum puto’ should be his motto. He should make it his daily practice to travel on the astral plane, taking in turn each of the most synthetic sections, the Sephiroth and the Paths. These being thoroughly understood, and an angel in each pledged to guard or to guide him at need, he should start on a new series of expeditions to explore the subordinate sections of each. He may then practise Rising on the Planes from these spheres, one after the other in rotation. When he is thoroughly conversant with the various methods of meeting unexpected emergencies, he may proceed to investigate the regions of the Qlippoth and the Demonic Forces. It should be his aim to obtain a comprehensive knowledge of the entire astral plane, with impartial love of truth for its own sake; just as a child learns the geography of the whole planet though he may have no intention of ever leaving his native land.”

The clairvoyance thus obtained may be used to watch the progress of ceremonies, when it becomes a highly useful gift, sometimes a necessity; and also in observing what occurs astrally when certain sigils or pentagrams are traced or names vibrated.

There are several methods of testing and protection, in addition to those already mentioned. The supreme method of protection—though it is infinitely more than technical means of banishing—is through the assumption of the godform of Harpocrates. The astral image should be formulated either as rising from a lotus or else standing erect over two crocodiles. Little need be said about this technique; it is adequately described elsewhere, in Z.1. Incidentally, this is an excellent preparation for meditation or vision, to formulate the form about and around one, and to identify oneself with it.

In the event, during any vision, that the seer is approached by entities, as to whose integrity or true character he has some doubts, the simplest form of testing is to formulate between the seer and the approaching entity the Banner of the West. As described in the document about the symbolism of the Neophyte ceremony, this banner is that which bars and threatens. It is one of the insignia of the Hiererus, whose throne is in the west of the temple, and his office is that of “avenger of the gods,” so situated as to represent a seat of witness and of punishment decreed against evil. And all his insignia partake of this symbolism. Thus, should the being be of an evil nature, “thus far and no further” is the message indicated to it by the banner. The interposition of the banner would be immediately efficacious, by causing it to disappear instantaneously. If, however, the entity is well intentioned and not evil, no harm will have been done by that formulation. No balanced force, no power of good, will object or resent legitimate forms of testing its integrity.

Since, likewise, the Banner of the East, one of the insignia of the Hierophant in the east of the temple, “represents the ascent of the initiate unto perfect knowledge of the light,” it may assist to formulate this banner about his own being. The central cross of the banner will suggest his own form with outstretched arms—a true Calvary Cross. About him, the seer will visualize vividly the interlaced red and blue triangles of the Tiphareth hexagram, at the same time imagining that the white triangle of the supernals has descended into his heart. The alternate and occasionally simultaneous use of these banners is a powerful means of banishing the evil and invoking balanced power to one's aid. In the rubrics of certain rituals, the injunction occurs to formulate this banner about talismans or flashing tablets that are being consecrated, as this process assists the descent or the incarnation of the light, or the invoked force, into the symbol.

The employment of the Rose Cross together with the vibration of the Pentagrammaton, YHShVH, is likewise another method of ensuring protection and of banishing evil. Usually, as previously stated, any threat of danger on the elemental planes represented by the tattwa symbols may be met simply by the vibration of the appropriate divine names, and, though very rarely necessary, by the banishing pentagrams traced in the air. The Rose Cross and the Pentagrammaton will apply more to planes above or more powerful than those of the tattwas. Experience combined with a sound instinct will dictate to the seer when such symbols should be used. He will find it occasionally of great assistance to commence his experiments by the preliminary use of the banishing rituals and by burning some incense.

In the Outer Order of the Stella Matutina, or the Golden Dawn, formal dress for this type of work as for temple ceremonies consisted of a black gown, red slippers, and a black and white nemyss; the sash of the grade could also be worn. In the Order of the R.R. et A.C., it was customary to wear a white gown, yellow or gold slippers, a nemyss of white and yellow stripes, and the Rose Cross lamén on one's breast. The lotus wand should be employed and held in the hand whilst skrying, and the four elemental weapons—fire wand, water cup, air dagger, and earth pentacle—should be placed before one. If there is a small table convenient, this should be covered with a black cloth, and the implements grouped on this as upon the altar, while the cross and triangle of the order should be put in the centre. Sometimes, a sympathetic projection into the elements may be encompassed by the preliminary use of the appropriate prayer of the elements provided in the grade rituals.

OF SKRYING AND TRAVELLING IN THE SPIRIT-VISION

By V.H. Soror V.N.R. ⁷

Having acquired the general rules, it is probable that the student will discover for himself particular methods more or less suited to his own particular temperament. But it may prove useful to some for me to write in some detail the mode of skrying and of astral projection which I have proved likely to bring successful results, and which by reasons of its continual tests would tend to lessen the many chances of illusion. Before proceeding further it may be well to refer to the Microcosm lecture ⁸ regarding the theory of skrying and astral projection.

The rules for skrying and astral projection being almost similar, the two subjects can be studied together, the one being taken as the complement of the other.

You can commence the operation “skrying” simply. That is to say, not projecting the astral beyond the sphere of sensation into the macrocosmos, but retaining it and perceiving some scene in the universe reflected in the symbol which you hold, this latter being to you as a mirror which shall reflect to you some scenes not within your range of sight. And secondly, you can continue the operation by using the same symbol, and by passing through it project yourself to the scene in question, which before you had only perceived as a reflection. The latter process will probably appear more vivid to the perception than the prior one, just as in material vision one is less likely to be deceived by going to a place and actually examining it than by obtaining knowledge of it from a mere reflection in a mirror.

For example, in the room in which I am now, I see reflected in a mirror a portion of the garden. I obtain an impression of all within my range of sight, but not nearly so powerful a one as when I step out into the garden to the spot in question and examine all the objects therein, feel the atmosphere, touch the ground, smell the flowers, etc.

But it is well to practice both methods. The latter will probably be found to be more instructive, though far more fatiguing, since you will, when projecting the astral, have to supply it with much vitality, drawn mostly from the nephesch.

In both skrying and astral projection, then, the key of success would appear to be, alternately, to employ intuition and reason, firstly by permitting each thought-picture to impress itself on the brain in the manner comprehended generally by the word “inspiration,” followed by the reason applying its knowledge of correspondences to an affirmation or correction of the same.

You must be prepared to receive impressions of scenes, forms, and sounds as vivid thought forms. “Thought forms” I use for want of a better word. There are distinctly in these experiences things heard, things felt, as well as things seen, which would prove that the qualities that we are here using are really the sublimated senses. That the faculty of clairvoyance, etc., exists is easily provable after a little patient exercise with one of the first methods given unto us for the practice of skrying.

Take the tattwa cards, and from them choose one at random, without looking to see what symbol it may represent, and lay it down on a table face downwards. Then try mentally to discover the symbol. To do this, make your mind a blank as much as possible (yet always keeping control over the same) chasing therefrom, for the time being, the reasoning element, memory, etc. You will find that after a few moments of gazing attentively at the back of the card, that it will seem as though the thought form of the tattwa appeared to enter the mind suddenly, and later, when more practiced, it will probably appear to you as if the tattwa symbol were trying to precipitate itself materially through the back of the card.⁹ But sometimes, especially if the cards have been long kept together in the pack in the same order, we may find that the back of the card in question is charged astrally not with the symbol upon its face, but with that upon the card whose face has been next its back in the order of the pack.

Some may find it easier to turn the card over astrally, that is in imagination, and in imagination endeavour to perceive what flashes into the mind at that moment.

As it is with the tattwas that our first experiences are made, I will choose one to illustrate the following rules, preferably one that shall be in harmony with the time that I commence my working.¹⁰

Rules for Skrying

Work if possible in an especially prepared magical room, Stella Matutina altar ¹¹ in the centre, on which stand the four elements and the cross and triangle, incense burning, lamp lighted, water in the cup,¹² bread, and salt. As well as these, place on the altar your four magical implements. Clothe yourself in your white robe and 5° = 6° sash, wearing on breast your Rose Cross.¹³

Have by you your sword and lotus wand. Sit at the side of the altar facing the quarter of the element, planet, or sign with which you are working. Should any other frater or soror be with you, arrange that they shall sit in balanced disposition ¹⁴ around the altar. That is, if the forces with which you work be in the west, your place is east of the altar facing west across it. Should it be inconvenient for you to have your own consecrated room, or to have all or any of your implements for your experiment, do your utmost to imagine them as astrally existing about you, and in any case in astral projection wear the garments and insignia astrally all through the experience. In fact, after constant, most constant, practice you will not probably find the absolute physical so necessary. Yet remember that though the material in magical working is the least important of the planes in one sense, yet in another it is of the utmost importance for it crystallizes the astral plane and completes it. And also have before you the exact correspondences of certain universal formulae (for in the aforesaid insignia and implements you hold a perfect representation of the universe,¹⁵ the contemplation of which should in itself tend to prevent your mind dwelling on irrelevant subjects, but on the contrary compel your attention to the sublime studies of the mysteries of the macrocosm). Also do these insignia, which have been consecrated, give you a certain power through their having attracted rays of force from the infinite invisible more or less potent in proportion to your development.

The importance of using the implements on every occasion would appear to be great. For the implement assists the invoking of a ceremony, and the latter should help the implement, and therefore every voyage, for example, to the realms of fire or water should add a flame to the wand and moisture to the cup.

Next purify the room with fire and water and the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram. Imagine that we have chosen as a tattwa, Apas-Prithivi.¹⁶ For this symbol, naturally, use the correspondences of water and earth, but bear in mind that the world of water is here chiefly expressed, the earth being secondary. Therefore in this particular example, it is well to use principally the cup, the pentacle only in a minor sense. To imply this, use the cup to make even many of the earth symbols, and only occasionally employ the pentacle in working the particular symbol.

In this suppositious case of Apas-Prithivi, thoroughly to fill your sphere with the idea of this tattwa, draw with the cup around your room the Greater Invoking Ritual of the Pentagram both of water and of earth. Then return to your seat, and for process one, skrying, do the following. Place the tattwa card before you on the altar, take the cup in the right hand and the pentacle in the left, and look at the symbol long and steadily until you can perceive it clearly as a thought vision when you shut your eyes. Vibrate the names of water and of earth (Empeh Arsel, etc.) and try to realize the mental union more and more. It may help you to perceive it as a large crescent made of blue or silvery water containing a cube of yellow sand. Continue trying to acquire a keen perception of the tattwa until the element and its shape and its qualities shall seem to have become a part of you, and you should then begin to feel as though you were one with that particular element, completely bathed in it, and as if all other elements were nonexistent.¹⁷ If this be correctly done, you will find that the thought of any other element than the one with which you are working will be distinctly distasteful to you.

Having succeeded in obtaining the thought vision of the symbol, continue vibrating the divine names with the idea well fixed in your mind of calling before you on the card a brain picture of some scene or landscape. This, when it first appears, will probably be vague, but continue to realize it more and more of whatever nature (imagination or memory, etc.),¹⁸ you may believe it to be—remembering that this is a passive state of the mind, and not yet is the time to test or reason.¹⁹ Only when the thought picture shall have become sufficiently tangible and vivid, and you find that you are beginning to lose the sense of confusion and vagueness, should you begin to apply tests. Before this period, all reasoning, all doubting, is destructive to the experiment.

In all probability, the thought picture may become so clear to you (though this may be a matter of time and much practice) that it will seem as though the picture were trying to precipitate through the symbol. In such a case as this there can be no difficulty, for the vision will be nearly as clear to the perception as a material one might be. But you can arrive at a great deal by merely receiving the impression of the landscape as a thought. For example, I perceive appearing an expanse of sea, a slight strip of land—high grey rocks or boulders rising out of the sea. To the left a long gallery of cliffs jutting out some distance into the sea.²⁰ This appears sufficiently vivid, so I begin my tests. I suspect my memory chiefly, so I draw in front of the picture on the card, with the lotus wand, a large Tau in light. Then, believing that I may have constructed the scene in imagination, I now formulate on the card a large Kaph. In this case, neither of these symbols banish or dim the scene in any way, so I continue. (But if the scene vanishes or changes or becomes blurred, it is well to banish with a pentagram whatever may remain on the card, and simply recommence the process at the point where you are endeavouring to attract a picture on the card.)

I now draw over the picture with the cup the water pentagram, and with the pentacle the earth pentagram ²¹ using the correct vibration. This intensifies the picture, and I now perceive flung into it many figures, principally of the water spirit type. On gazing further, and repeating the vibration, I perceive a much larger figure than the elementals, overshadowing them, clothed in blue and white, with some glimmering of silver. To obtain detail I must work for some time longer and must continue invoking with my water and earth symbols and look and test alternately.

Believing that sufficient has been herein explained to enable a student to understand the general method of this process of skrying, I will proceed further to the rules for astral projection, but be it remembered that it is possible to carry this vision very far indeed, and that the student should by no means stop where I have done.

Astral Projection ²²

Therefore you will follow the rules given in the preceding pages for skrying, until the point where the symbol of the tattwa has become perfectly vivid to the perception and when you feel as though you were almost one with the element. You may modify the earlier stages of the working by so enlarging the symbol astrally that the human being can pass through it. When very vivid, and not until then, pass, spring, or fly through it, and do not begin to reason till you find yourself in some place or landscape.²³ And as before, only test when the landscape shall have become a tangible and somewhat complete picture. If you have made your mind a blank as much as possible, the first idea that enters your mind (that is to say vividly) after you have traversed the symbol should be a correct correspondence of the tattwa in question.

Having already, by the process of skrying, obtained a vision of Apas-Prithivi, in this particular case I will use the same symbol, on which I still perceive the reflected picture, and will leap through it, and go astrally to the scene in question. I therefore astrally fly or leap through it.

My first impression is to find myself standing on a boulder slightly out at sea, which I had noted as an important point in the picture. I realize that I am standing clothed in my $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$ insignia and white robe, on this rock, facing the shore. Turning to the right I am conscious of the gallery of cliffs, and to the left and back of me the sea, everywhere.

(On the planes, it would appear well to act exactly as one would in a physical experience or a landscape, realizing each step as one goes, not trying to look on both sides at once or at the back of one's head, but turning first to the right hand and examining that, and then to the left, then turning right around, and so on. It is better as much as possible to remain in one spot (until very experienced) to avoid reflexes. In fact, the more practically the experiences are worked, the more chance of success.)

I have an impression that the air is very cold. I stoop down and feel the rock, which I find is of a coral nature. I have already tested this vision in process one (skrying), but it is well to repeat the same, to see if I am sufficiently in touch with the landscape. I therefore trace with my astral lotus wand the symbols I evoked before, the Tau and the Kaph, in white light, making them very forcibly. In fact, I do not cease tracing them until I actually perceive them as vividly as I do the landscape. Seeing that the scene does not vanish or become dim,²⁴ I now with my astral cup and pentacle draw in light very large water and earth pentagrams, standing on the sea. These, even more than the former symbols, should be continued and accentuated until they become to the impression of the mind as living entities as the landscape itself. If these latter be correctly drawn and sufficiently realized, there will be little chance of illusion during the rest of the experience.

The drawing of these pentagrams standing above the sea appears at once to increase the vitality of the scene, for the rather intangible elementals and angelic being that I had perceived in the reflected picture became more and more real to the impression.

Had I commenced at once with astral projection without the introduction of my skrying experience, I should have had probably to evoke these figures. In such a case, using the invoking pentagrams of water, I should continue vibrating the deity names, etc., of these elements (employing as well as the names before mentioned, those of the angels and rulers, such names as Tharsis, Kerub, etc., being very potent) and would call upon a force by right of these names and symbols to manifest, and I should continue this process until some forms appeared.

After careful examination, by first receiving the impression and then testing it, I can describe the following. The angelic being, feminine in type, pale brown hair and light grey eyes, is draped in blue and white, draperies heavy in nature, and wears a crown formed of crescents. She holds in the left hand a curious cup, heavy, and with a squarish base, and in the right a wand with a symbol much like the positive element of water.

The elementals vary in type, the majority being of the mermaid and merman nature, but again many tending to the earth and air nature.

Turning to the angelic being, I make the $5^\circ = 6^\square$ signs and L.V.X. signs, and to the elementals the $3^\circ = 8^\square$ and $1^\circ = 10^\square$ signs, and by right of these (that is to say by the knowledge of the central spirit, and, in their instance of that of water and earth) I ask to have explained some of the secrets of the working of the plane of Apas-Prithivi.

The angel having answered my signs by similar ones, gives the impression that she is willing to instruct me. (This can enter the mind as an extraneous thought, or may be heard ²⁵ clairaudiently.) She shows how even the work on this particular spot is varied, and according to the types of the elementals is the labour allotted. Some of the elementals tending to the gnome type are digging in the cliffs, with spiky instruments, and boring holes therein, thereby permitting the water to enter freely. (This may explain the spongy rather than broken aspect of the rock.) The mermaid and merman elementals, which are in the large majority, I think, receive some of the dust, which they carry into the sea. (Some of this may go to form islands.) Others also are bringing earth and weeds and such-like from the depths, also probably to form land. There are also figures holding funnel-like cups who rise from the sea, and having drawn air into them, dive again, carrying that element into the sea.²⁶

It can be understood how these investigations can be carried to very great detail, but to be as brief as possible I ask if I may be shown the effect of this ray of Apas-Prithivi on the universe generally and on this planet in particular.

I understand that the effect of the ray is generating and fructifying generally, and on the whole beneficent, though everything would depend on the force with which it was united. Its correlative would be thick rich water, containing much substance. I ask for its influence on the Earth. (To do this I can show as a thought-picture this planet of ours, with its continents, seas, etc., drawn thereon, and pray this angel to send a ray first to one spot and then to another.) In answer, I perceive the ray falling right through the water of the Earth, as if the affinity lay with all land under water. "The Lifter of Earth in the Waters is its name" does the angel say. Nearly all vegetation attracts this ray, but very especially water plants, most of all those growing under water. The zoophyte only partially attracts it, this latter seeming rather largely composed of some active element, fire, I think. Among animals the ray appears to fall on the seal and hippopotamus, and has a general affinity for most amphibious animals. With fish, the link seems to be small, a tortoise, a frog, and a snail are shown me, and some water fowl of the duck type, very few actual birds, a sea fowl to an extent.

Falling on man, on the savage it would appear to be beneficial to health generally, to give a feeling of well-being, and would also govern to some extent generation. Its tendency would be to accentuate sensuality and laziness. On the intellectual man it increases intuition, with some desire to clothe idea with form, therefore the first vague development of form in the mind of the artist. (As before remarked, these experiences can be carried very far indeed, but as this experience has already become rather voluminous I will cease at this point—believing that sufficient is here expressed to suggest the manner of working these astral experiences generally.)

I salute therefore the angel with the L.V.X. signs and the elementals by the $3^\circ = 8^\square$ and $1^\circ = 10^\square$ signs, and banish astrally the pentagram and other symbols that I have traced upon the scene. The more powerfully the symbols have been evoked, the more powerfully should they be banished.

If you should be feeling a sensation of fatigue, as I before mentioned, make towards the symbols the Sign of the Enterer indrawing their vitality into yourself again by the Sign of Harpocrates. Then return by the way in which you came, that is through the symbol, and back into your room.²⁷ Once in your room, perform the Supreme Banishing Ritual of the Pentagrams that you have evoked; supposing a scene to remain on the symbol of the tattwa, banish that also. When you have had considerable practice it is probable that such detailed care as is herein indicated will not be necessary. Should the operation be too complicated to accomplish at one sitting it would be possible to divide it into parts. It is certain that you will find that you have practiced your spritual vision and acquired more knowledge in one experience carefully worked and tested than in a hundred careless and vague experiments which simply strengthen mental deception.

8. Note by JMG: Book One.

9. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: This experiment is very good for the practice of spiritual sight, and in this manner you can easily prove correctness of vision. Also for this kind of simple experience you need not prepare yourself spiritually to such an extent as with further working, so that you can have your cards if you wish continually with you, and practice with them when you will, at odd moments.

10. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: To find tattwa when in course, note time of sunrise. Akasa always begins with sunrise and lasts twenty-four minutes, followed by Vayu twenty-four minutes, Tejas twenty-four minutes, Apas twenty-four minutes, Prithivi twenty-four minutes.
11. Note by JMG: That is, the standard Golden Dawn altar as used in the $0^\circ = 0^\square$ grade.
12. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: Placed at junction of cross and triangle, the incense, lamp, etc., should be at angles of arms of cross.
13. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: All $5^\circ = 6^\square$ members who are Zelator Adepti Minores have the right to wear the white robe and yellow girdle of the Third Adept, but not his cloak or nemyss.
14. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: If two persons, one should be opposite the other. If three persons, form a triangle. If four persons, form a square. If five persons, a pentagram, etc.
15. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: The Golden Dawn altar, the most synthetical of the symbols. The material universe ruled by the spirit and four elements. The Rose Cross contains the affirmation of the principal divisions of the universe, synthetical like the altar, but particular in the sense that it is attributed to the Sephirah Tiphareth, the central sun, and is therefore the symbol for the microcosm—man, the adept, he to whom perfection of the microcosm means a certain conscious union with the macrocosm.
The white robe and yellow girdle imply purity—Kether, harmony—gold, Tiphareth. Lotus wand—mercy. Sword—severity.
16. Note by JMG: That is, the Prithivi sub-plane of Apas, symbolized by a small yellow square on a silver crescent.
17. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: Imagination (eidolon) means the faculty of building an image. The imagination of the artist must lie in the power, which he possesses more or less in proportion to his sincerity, and his intuition, of perceiving forces in the macrocosm, and allying or attuning himself thereto, his talents naturally and his artificial training permitting him to formulate images which shall express those forces.
18. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: During this process, it is more than likely that you will be believing that the picture is one of memory, of imagination, of construction, etc., all these qualities being analogous to the faculty that you are employing, and the probability of their arising at this moment will be great.
19. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: Let it be remembered that this can only be a part of the plane of the symbol expressed by Apas-Prithivi.
20. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: Employ the “lords who wander” (the seven planets), the planetary tarot trumps, as important test symbols.

For Memory			Lord of the Night of Time
For Construction
For Anger, Impatience
For Vanity
For Pleasure
For Imagination
For Wandering Thoughts

21. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: Use occasionally the pentacle, so as not to ignore to too great an extent the part that earth plays herein.
22. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: In the case of starting the entire experience with astral projection only, you will understand that you ignore the portion of the process which attracts the picture to the card, but simply go forward through the symbol when once the latter is realized.
23. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: If working with correct correspondences, you are bound to arrive at some place answering to the same, if you project your astral sufficiently.
24. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: If after these repeated tests the vision becomes diminished or changes very much, banish with the astral implement, and return in the way you came, through the symbol, and start again freshly. If you feel you have expended too much force in the symbols which you traced in the scenes, redraw some of the force spent into yourself again by the formula of the Signs of Horus and Harpocrates. Extend towards the symbols in the sign of Hoor, redrawing them into yourself by the sign of Hoorpokraat.
25. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: Sometimes it seems as though one had to find the words to translate the impression; sometimes the words appear to be found already, for one believes that one has heard them.
26. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: The symbol shows the potency of the whorl formation.
27. Note by V.H. Soror Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum: Some students, I believe, have great difficulty in returning. In such a case one can do so gradually by first flying into space, thinking of this planet, fixing the thoughts on the particular country, then on the particular spot therein, then on the house, and lastly on the room and entering therein. But in most cases this would be unnecessarily complicated.

TATTWA VISIONS

Here follow two tattwa visions by Soror Vestigia. These are provided as simple examples of the technique, and the procedure to be followed. The first of them is the fiery sub-element of earth, Tejas of Prithivi.

Vestigia states that she found herself, after going through the imagined symbols, “in a volcanic district. No fire is to be seen, but the type of land is volcanic. Hill and mountains, hot air, and sunny light. Using a pentacle, and calling on the earth names, I see before me a species of angelic king elemental. On testing him, I find that he gives me the Neophyte saluting sign and the Philosophus (fire) sign. He bows low to the symbols that I give him, and says that he is willing to show me some of the working of the plane.

“He has a beautiful face, somewhat of the fire type, yet sweet in expression. He wears a golden crown and a fiery red cloak opening on to a yellow tunic, over which being a shirt of mail. In his right hand he bears a wand, the lower end or handle being shaped somewhat as the pentacle implement, and the staff and upper end being as the fire wand. In his left hand (but this I do not clearly see) he bears a fire wand; I think that the right hand points upwards and the left downwards, and is a symbol to invoke forces.

“Little figures of the gnome type come at his call. When commanded some broke the rocky parts of the mountain with pick-axes which they carry. Others appear to dig in the ground. In breaking off these rocky pieces, there fall away little bits of bright metal or copper. Some of these gnomes collected the bits of metal and carried them away in little wallets slung by a baldrick from their shoulders. We followed them and came to some mountainous peaks. From these peaks issued some large and fierce, some hardly perceivable, fires. Into cauldrons or bowls placed above these fires, the collected pieces of metal were placed. I was told that this was a lengthy process, but asked that I might see the result of what appeared to be a gradual melting of this metal. I was then shown some bowls containing liquid gold, but not I imagine, very pure metal.

“I again followed my guide, the angelic king elemental ruler, who gave me his name as Atapa, and followed by some gnomes bearing the bowl of liquid gold, we came, after passing through many subterranean passages cut in the mountains, to a huge cavern of immense breadth and height. It was like a palace cut out of the rock. We passed through rudely cut passages, until we reached a large central hall, at the end of which was a dais on which were seated the king and queen, the courtier gnomes standing around.

“This hall seemed lighted by torches, and at intervals were roughly cut pillars. The gnomes who accompanied us presented to the king and queen their gold. These latter commanded their attendants to remove this to another apartment. I asked the king and queen for a further explanation, and they, appointing substitutes in their absence, retire to an inner chamber which appeared more elevated than the rest. The architecture here seemed to be of a different kind. This small hall had several sides, each with a door, draped by a curtain.

“In the centre of the hall was a large tripod receiver containing some of the liquid gold such as that we had brought with us. The king and queen who before had worn the colours of earth now donned, he the red, and she the white, garments. They then with their earth-fire wands invoked and joined their wands over the tripod. There appeared in the air above a figure such as Atapa, he who had brought me here. He, extending his wand, and invoking, caused to appear from each door a figure of a planetary or zodiacal nature. These each in turn held out his wand over the gold, using some sigil which I can but dimly follow, the gold each time appearing to undergo a change. When these last figures have retired again behind the curtains, the king and queen used a species of ladle and compressed together the gold, making it into solid shapes and placing one of these at each of the curtained doors. Some gold still remained in the bowl. The king and queen departed, and it seemed to me that I saw a figure again appear from behind each curtain and draw away the pieces of gold.”

The second one I shall quote is a vision of spirit of water, Akasa of Apas, also by Vestigia.

“A wide expanse of water with many reflections of bright light, and occasionally glimpses of rainbow colours appearing (perhaps symbolizing the beginning of formation in water). When divine and other names were pronounced, elementals of the mermaid and merman type appear, but few of other elemental forms. These water forms are extremely changeable, one moment appearing as solid mermaids and mermen, the next melting into foam.

“Raising myself by means of the highest symbols I have been taught, and vibrating the names of water, I rose until the water vanished, and instead I beheld a mighty world or globe, with its dimensions and divisions of gods, angels, elementals, demons—the whole universe of water (like the tablet ruled by Empeh Arsel Gaiol); I called on this latter name, and the universe seemed to vivify more and more.

“I then called on Hcoma, and there appeared standing before me a mighty archangel (with four wings) robed in glistening white and crowned. In one hand, the right, he held a species of trident, and in the left a cup filled to the brim with an essence which appeared to be derived from above. This essence, brimming over, poured down below on either side. From the overflowing or overrunning of this cup, which derives its essence from Atziluth, apparently the cup being in Briah, the world of Yetzirah obtains its moisture. It is there differentiated into its various operative forces.

“These operative forces are represented by angels each with their respective office in the world of moisture. These forces working in Yetzirah, when descending and mingling with the Kether of Assiah, are initiating the force of that which we as human beings call moisture.”

M. THE VISION OF THE UNIVERSAL MERCURY

28

The Universal Mercury

“We stood upon a dark and rocky cliff that overhung the restless seas. In the sky above us was a certain glorious sun, encircled by that brilliant rainbow, which they of the Path of the Chameleon know.

“I beheld, until the heavens opened, and a form like unto the Mercury of the Greeks ²⁹ descended, flashing like the lightning; and he hovered between the sky and the sea. In his hand was the staff ³⁰ wherewith the eyes of mortals are closed in sleep, and wherewith he also, at will, re-awakeneth the sleeper; and terribly did the globe at its summit dart forth rays. And he bare a scroll whereon was written:

Lumen est in Deo,

Lux in homine factum,
Sive Sol,
Sive Luna,
Sive Stelloc errantes,
Omnia in Lux,
Lux in Lumine,
Lumen in Centrum,
Centrum in Circulo,
Circulum ex Nihilo,
Quid scis, id eris.³¹

F.I.A.T.³²

E.S.T.³³

E.S.T.O.³⁴

E.R.I.T.³⁵

In fidelitate et veritate universas ab aeternitate.³⁶

Nunc Hora.

Nunc Dies.

Nunc Annus,

Nunc Saeculum,

Omnia sunt Unum, et Omnia in Omnibus.

A.E.T.E.R.N.I.T.A.S.³⁷

Then Hermes cried aloud, and said:

“I am Hermes Mercurius, the Son of God, the messenger uniting superiors and inferiors. I exist not without them, and their union is in me. I bathe in the ocean. I fill the expanse of air. I penetrate the depths beneath.”

And the frater who was with me, said unto me:

“Thus is the balance of nature maintained, for this Mercury is the beginning of all movement. This He,³⁸ this She, this IT, is in all things, but hath wings which thou canst not constrain. For when thou sayest ‘He is here’ he is not here, for by that time he is already away, for he is eternal motion and vibration.”

Nevertheless in Mercury must thou seek all things. Therefore not without reason did our ancient fratres say that the Great Work was to “fix the volatile.” There is but one place where he can be fixed, and that is the centre, a centre exact. “Centrum in trigono centri.”³⁹ The centre in the triangle of the centre.

If thine own soul be baseless how wilt thou find a standing point whence to fix the soul of the universe?

“Christus de Christi,
Mercurius de Mercurio,
Per viam crucis,
Per vitam lucis
Deus te adjutabitur!”⁴⁰

TALISMANS

The Formation of Talismans and Flashing Tablets

A talisman is a magical figure charged with the force which it is intended to represent. In the construction of a talisman, care should be taken to make it, as far as is possible, so to represent the universal forces that it should be in exact harmony with those you wish to attract, and the more exact the symbolism, the more easy it is to attract the force—other things coinciding, such as consecration at the right time, etc.

A symbol should also be correct in its symbolism, but it is not necessarily the same as a talisman.

A flashing tablet is one made in the complementary colours. A flashing colour, then, is the complementary colour which, if joined to the original, enables it to attract, to a certain extent, the Akasic current from the atmosphere, and to a certain extent from yourself, thus forming a vortex which can attract its flashing light from the atmosphere. Therefore, to make anything of this description which shall be really operative, so does it proportionately tire you.

The complementary colours are:

White	complementary to black and grey
Red	complementary to green
Blue	complementary to orange
Yellow	complementary to violet
Olive	complementary to red-orange
Blue-green	complementary to russet
Violet	complementary to citrine
Reddish orange	complementary to green-blue
Deep amber	complementary to indigo
Lemon yellow	complementary to red-violet

Yellow-green

complementary to crimson

The other complementaries of other mixed colours can easily be found from this scale.

Coming now to the nature and method of formation of the talisman, the first thing to be remembered is that it is not always a just and right thing to form a talisman with the idea of completely changing the current of another person's karma. In any case, you could only do this in a certain sense. It will be remembered that the words of the Christ which preceded His cures were "Thy sins be forgiven thee," which meant that the karmic action was exhausted. Only an adept who is of the nature of a god can have the power, even if he have the right, to take upon himself the karma of another. That is to say, that if you endeavour to change completely, (I am not now speaking of adapting and making the best of a person's karma), the life current, you must be of so great a force that you can take this karma from them by right of the divine power to which you have attained—in which case you will only do it in so far as it does not hinder their spiritual development.

If, however, this is attempted on a lower plane, it will usually be found that what you are endeavouring to bring about is in direct opposition to the karma of the person concerned. It will not work the required effect and will probably bring a current of exhaustion and trouble on yourself. Without doing much good you will have attracted his own karma into your own atmosphere and, in fact, brought it on yourself.

These remarks only apply to an attempted radical change in the karma of another, which is a thing you have no right to do until you have attained the highest adeptship.

The formation or adaptation of talismans in ordinary matters should be employed with great discernment. What may assist in material things is often a hindrance spiritually, seeing that for a force to work, it must attract elemental forces of the proper description, which may thus, to an extent, endanger your spiritual nature.

Also, in making talismans for a person, you must endeavour to isolate yourself entirely from him. You must banish from your mind any feeling of love or hate, irritation, etc., for all these feelings operate against your power.

It is but rarely that a talisman for the love of a person is a right and justifiable thing to construct. Pure love links us to the nature of the gods. There is a perfect love between the angels and the gods because there is perfect harmony among them, but that is not the lower and earthly love. Thus a talisman made for terrestrial love would be sealed with the impress of your own weakness, and even if successful, would react on you in other ways. The only way in which real power can be gained, is by transcending the material plane and trying to link yourself to your divine and higher soul. That is why trouble is so great an initiator, because trouble brings you nearer spiritual things when material things fail.

Therefore, a talisman as a rule is better made for one in whom you have no interest. In the work of actual consecration, it is always a good thing to purify the room and use the Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram. All these are aids which the adept, when sufficiently advanced, will know when to use and when not to do so. It is better, if possible, to finish a talisman at one sitting, because it is begun under certain conditions and it may be difficult to put yourself in the same frame of mind at another time.

Another point that beginners are apt to run away with is that talismans can be made wholesale. Suppose a dozen talismans were made to do good to as many different people, a ray from yourself must charge each talisman. You have sent out a sort of spiral from your aura which goes on to the talisman and attracts a like force from the atmosphere—that is, if you have learned to excite the like force in yourself at the moment of consecration. So that, in the case supposed, you would have a dozen links connecting with you, like so many wires in a telegraph office, and whenever the force which any of these talismans was designed to combat becomes too strong for the force centred therein, there is an instantaneous communication with you—so that the loss of force to which you would be continually liable might be such as to deplete you of vitality and cause you to faint.

In cases where talismans and symbols have done their work, they should be carefully de-charged and then destroyed. If this is not done and you take a symbol, say of water, still charged and throw it into the fire to get rid of it, you are inflicting intense torment on the elemental you have attracted, and it will react on you sooner or later. Also, if you throw away a still charged talisman, thus desecrating it, it will become the property of other things, which, through it, will be enabled to get at you. It is for these reasons that the talisman should be de-charged with the pentagram and hexagram according as it partakes of the planetary or zodiacal nature—and these remarks apply equally to flashing tablets.

If a talisman is given to a person who goes away and does not return it, you can render it inoperative by invoking it astrally and then de-charging it with great care and force.

A flashing tablet should be carefully made, charged, and consecrated, and then each morning the Adeptus should sit before it and practise clairvoyance, endeavouring to go through it to the plane it represents, and then to invoke the power and ask for strength to accomplish the matter desired, which will be granted if it be a lawful and laudable operation.

Any flashing tablet of two colours should be as nearly balanced in proportion of the extent of colour as possible—the ground one colour and the charge another. There is also a mode in which three colours can be used in a planetary talisman. This is done by placing the seven colours on the heptagram and drawing two lines to the points exactly opposite, which will thus yield two flashing colours. This, properly drawn, will give the effect of a flashing light playing on the symbol, partly visible physically and partly clairvoyantly, i.e., if properly charged. An advanced adept should be able to charge his tablet to a certain extent as he constructs it.

The radical colour of the planet is symbolical. But a talisman for harmony of idea, say, could be well represented by the Tiphareth of Venus—a beautiful yellow-green, and so on.

The lion kerub of Venus would represent spiritual fire and thus symbolizes the inspiration of the poet—the colour being a soft and beautiful pearl grey, and the charges should be white. The watery part of Venus would represent the reflective faculty and answer to spiritual beauty, colour a bluish-green. The vault contains a perfect scale of talismans of every description of planet, and shows how a planetary man will look at everything according to the colour of his aura, due to the planet under which he is born. The real adept comes forth from the sides to the centre. He is no longer under the dominion of the stars.

Having made a magical talisman, you should use some form of charging and consecrating it, which is suitable to the operation. There are certain words and letters which are to be invoked in the charging of a tablet, the letters governing the sign under which the operation falls, together with the planet associated therewith (if a planetary talisman). Thus in elemental operations, you take the letters of the appropriate zodiacal triplicity, adding AL thereto, thus forming an angelic name which is the expression of the force. Hebrew names, as a rule, represent the operation of certain general forces, while the names on the Enochian or angelical tablets represent a species of more particular ideas. Both classes of names should be used in these operations.

After preparing the room in the way laid down for the consecration of lesser magical implements, supposing this to be an elemental talisman, first formulate towards the four quarters the Supreme Ritual of the Pentagram as taught. Then invoke the divine names, turning towards the quarter of the element.

Let the Adeptus then, being seated or standing before the tablet, and looking in the requisite direction of the force which he wishes to invoke, take several deep inspirations, close the eyes, and holding the breath, mentally pronounce the letters of the forces invoked. Let this be done several times, as if you breathed upon the tablet pronouncing them in the vibratory manner. Then, rising, make the sign of the Rose Cross over the tablet, and repeating the requisite formula, first describe round the talisman a circle, with the appropriate magical implement, and then make the invoking pentagrams five times over it, as if the pentagrams stood upright upon it, repeating the letters of the triplicity involved with AL added. Then solemnly read any invocation required, making the proper signs from the rose as you pronounce the names.

The first operation is to initiate a whorl from yourself. The second, to attract the force in the atmosphere into the vortex you have formed.

Then read the elemental prayer as in the rituals, and close with the signs of the circle and the cross (that is the Rose Cross) after performing the necessary banishing.

Be careful, however, not to banish over the newly consecrated talisman, as that would simply de-charge it again and render it useless. Before banishing, you should wrap the charged talisman in clean white silk or linen.

Sigils

In the opening ceremony of the grade of $5^{\circ} = 6^{\square}$ Adeptus Minor, the complete symbol of the rose and cross is called the “key of sigils and of rituals,” and it is further said that it represents the forces of the twenty-two letters in nature, as divided into a three, a seven, and a twelve.⁴¹

The inner three petals of the rose symbolize the active elements of air, fire, and water, operating in the earth, which is as it were the recipient of them, their container and ground of operation. They are coloured, as are all the other petals, according to the hues of the rainbow in the masculine (positive) scale. The seven next petals answer to the letters of the seven planets, and the twelve outer to the twelve signs of the zodiac.

Now if thou wilt trace the sigil of any word or name either in the air or written upon paper, thou shalt commence with a circle at the point of the initial letter on the rose, and draw with thy magical weapon a line from this circle unto the place of the next letter of the name. Continue this, until thou hast finished the word which the letters compose. If two letters of the same sort, such as two Beths or Gimels, come together, thou shalt represent the same by a crook or wave in the line at that point.

And if there be a letter, as Resh in Metatron, through which the line passeth to another letter and which yet formeth part of the name, thou shalt make a noose in the line at that point thus:  to mark the same. If thou art drawing the sigil thou mayest work it in the respective colours of the letters and add these together to form a synthesis of colour. Thus the sigil of Metatron shall be: blue, greenish-yellow, orange, red-orange, and greenish-blue: the synthesis will be a reddish-citron.⁴²

Now we will trace, for example, the sigils of the forces under Binah, the third Sephirah. Incidentally, the sigils for the plane of a Sephirah are always worked out on this system in this order:

- First: Sigil of the Sephirah—Binah.
- Second: Sigil of the divine name, representing the force of the Sephirah in the world of Atziluth. For Binah, YHVH Elohim.
- Third: The sigil of the archangel, representing the force of the Sephirah in Briah—Tzaphkiel.

- Fourth: Sigil of the choir of angels, representing the force of the Sephirah in Yetzirah—Aralim.
- Fifth: The sigil of the sphere of the planet representing the force of the Sephirah in Assiah—Shabbathai.
- Finally: The sigils of any other names whose numbers have some relation to the powers of the Sephirah or its planet.

Yet these latter (the sigils of the intelligence and spirit) are more usually taken from the magical kamea or square of the planets according to a slightly different system as will be shown hereafter.

Telesmatic Figures

Now there is also a mode whereby, combining the letters, the colours, the attributions, and their synthesis, thou mayest build up a telesmatic image of a force. The sigil shall then serve thee for the tracing of a current which shall call into action a certain elemental force. And know thou that this is not to be done lightly for thine amusement or experiment, seeing that the forces of nature were not created to be thy plaything or toy. Unless thou doest thy practical magical works with solemnity, ceremony, and reverence, thou shalt be like an infant playing with fire, and thou shalt bring destruction upon thyself.

Know, then, that if thou essay in the imagination to form an astral image from the names, the first letter shall be the head of the figure or form, and the final letter shall be its feet. The other letters shall be, and represent in their order, its body and members.

Agiel, for example, shall give thee an angelic form of the following nature and appearance:

Aleph, air. The head winged and of a golden colour, with long floating golden hair.

Gimel, Luna. Crowned with bluish silver crescent, and with a face like that of a grave and beautiful woman, with a bluish halo.

Yod, Virgo. The body of a maiden clothed in grass green robe.

Aleph, air. Golden wings of a large size, partly covering the power part of the figure.

Lamed, Libra. Feet and limbs well-proportioned and, either in the hand of the figure or lying at its feet, the sword and scales of justice in bright green.

Playing round the figure will be a greenish light, the colour of its synthesis. The keys of the tarot may help thee in the form.

See well also that thou makest the image as pure and beautiful as possible, for the more impure or common the figure, the more dangerous is it unto thee. Write upon the breast its sigil, upon the girdle its name, and place clouds below the feet. And when thou hast done this with due solemnity and rigid correctness of symbolism, shunning as thou wouldst shun death any suggestion of coarseness or vulgarity in an angelic symbol, then hear what it shall say unto thee.

Seraphim will give thee an angelic figure like a warrioress with flame playing about her, and a countenance glorious like the sun, and beneath her feet the stormy sea and thunderclouds, and lightning about her, and a glow as of flame. She has a triangular helmet or headdress of flame like the symbol of fire.

Graphiel will give thee a great angel like a female warrior with a most glorious countenance, crowned with the crescent and flashing with light, and surrounded by flame and lightning and with four wings.

The termination EL always gives to angelic forms the wings and symbols of justice. The ending YAH will make the figures like enthroned kings or queens, and with flaming glory at their feet.

The Vibratory Mode of Pronouncing the Divine Names

In vibrating the divine names, the operator should first of all rise as high as possible towards the idea of the divine white brilliance in Kether—keeping the mind raised to the plane of loftiest aspiration. Unless this is done, it is dangerous to vibrate only with the astral forces, because the vibration attracts a certain force to the operator, and the nature of the force attracted rests largely on the condition of mind in which the operator is.

The ordinary mode of vibrating is as follows: Take a deep and full inspiration and concentrate your consciousness in your heart, which answers to Tiphareth. (Having first, as already said, ascended to your Kether, you should endeavour to bring down the white brilliance into your heart, prior to centreing your consciousness there.)

Then formulate the letters of the name required in your heart, in white, and feel them written there. Be sure to formulate the letters in brilliant white light, not merely in dull whiteness as the colour of the Apas tattwa. Then, emitting the breath, slowly pronounce the letters so that the sound vibrates within you, and imagine that the breath, while quitting the body, swells you so as to fill up space. Pronounce the name as if you were vibrating it through the whole universe, and as if it did not stop until it reached the further limits.

All practical occult work which is of any use tires the operator or withdraws some magnetism, and therefore, if you wish to do anything that is at all important, you must be in perfect magnetic and nervous condition, or else you will do evil instead of good.

When you are using a name and drawing a sigil from the rose, you must remember that the Sephirah to which the rose and cross are referred is Tiphareth, whose position answers to the position of the heart, as if the rose were therein. It is not always necessary to formulate before you in space the telesmatic angelic figure of the name. As a general rule, pronounce the name as many times as there are letters in it.

Further on Telesmatic Figures

As before taught the names of all angels and angelic forces terminate, with few exceptions, in either AL or YAH. The divine name AL belongs to Chesed and it represents a good, powerful, and mighty force, but of somewhat milder operation than the name YAH. Since not only the angels but even devils are said to draw their force and power directly from the prolific source of the divine energies, therefore frequently to the names of evil spirits is AL added. The name YAH is added to the name of an angel or spirit who exercises only a good and somewhat beneficent office.

This being understood, these two terminations being rather in the nature of incidental attributions than of essential distinction, they need not be taken too much notice of in the construction of a telesmatic image.

In building up such an image, you can either imagine it astrally before you or paint the actual resemblance. Care should, however, be taken to pronounce the divine names belonging to the world under which the telesmatic image under course of construction would fall. Thus to Atziluth are allotted deific names. To Briah, archangelic and so on. It is also useful to employ the Sephirotic names which are comprised in the special world to which the telesmatic image is allotted.

It is well to note that the four worlds themselves formulate the law involved in the building up or expression of any material thing. The world of Atziluth is purely archetypal and primordial, and to it, as before said, deific names are applied. Briah is creative and originative, and to it certain great gods called archangels are allotted. Yetzirah is formative and angelic orders are allotted thereunto. Assiah which is the material world consists of the great kingdoms of the elementals, human beings, and in some cases of the Qliploth—though these latter really occupy the planes below Assiah.

From these remarks it will be seen that a telesmatic image can hardly apply to Atziluth; that to Briah it can only do so in a restricted sense. Thus a telesmatic image belonging to that world would have to be represented with a kind of concealed head, possessing a form shadowy and barely indicated. Telesmatic images, then, really belong to Yetzirah. Therefore it would be impossible to employ the telesmatic image of a divine name in Atziluth, for it would not represent that in the world of Atziluth, but rather its correlation in Yetzirah. In Assiah you would get elemental forms.

The sex of the figure depends upon the predominance of the masculine or the feminine in the whole of the letters together, but a jumble of the sexes should be avoided in the same form. The image built up should be divided into as many parts as there are letters, commencing at the upper part and so on in order. In addition to this method of determining the sex of the telesmatic image of a name, certain names are inherently masculine, others feminine, and some epicene, irrespective of the mere testimony of the letters.

Sandalphon, for instance is thus analysed:

Samekh:	Male
Peh:	Female
Nun:	Male

Vau:	Male
Daleth:	Female
Nun:	Male
Lamed:	Female

Therefore masculine predominates, and if it were an ordinary name you would make a masculine form out of it. But as this name is especially applied to the feminine kerub, it is an exception to the rule; it is an archangelic name, belonging to the Briatic world and not merely an angelic name relating to Yetzirah. Sandalphon is also called Yetzer, meaning “left,” and its letters are: female, female, and male, so that, in this case, it may be any of these.

The seven letters composing the name Sandalphon are thus adapted to the telesmatic image.

Samekh:	Head. Would represent a beautiful and active face rather thin than fat.
Nun:	Neck. Would be admirably full.
Daleth:	Shoulders of a beautiful woman.
Lamed:	Heart and chest, the latter perfectly proportioned.
Peh:	Hips strong and full.
Vau:	Legs massive.
Nun:	Feet sinewy and perhaps winged.

If it be desired to build up an elemental form out of this name a very peculiar figure would result.

Samekh:	Head fierce, but rather beautiful.	Blue
Nun:	Neck with eagle’s wings from behind.	Blue-green
Daleth:	Shoulders feminine, rather beautiful.	Green-blue
Lamed:	Chest of a woman.	Emerald
Peh:	Strong and shaggy hips and thighs.	Red

Vau:	Legs of a bull.	Red-orange
Nun (final):	Feet of an eagle.	Green-blue

This, it will be seen, is almost a synthetical Kerubic figure. This figure may be represented, as it were, with its feet on the earth and its head in the clouds. The colours in the scale of the king would synthesize as a delicate and sparkling green.

The uncovered parts of the body would be blue, the countenance belonging to Sagittarius would be almost that of a horse. The whole form would be like that of a goddess between Athor and Neith holding a bow and arrows, that is if represented as an Egyptian symbol.

If again we endeavour to translate this name into symbols on a Tattwic plane, we get the following:

Samekh	comes under	Fire
Nun	comes under	Water
Daleth	comes under	Water of Earth
Lamed	comes under	Air
Peh	comes under	Fire
Nun	comes under	Water

These would be synthesized thus: a silver crescent on a red triangle placed over a yellow square. All three would be charged and enclosed within a large silver crescent.

Now, taking an example, the telesmatic image appertaining to the letter Aleph. This on the Briatic plane, would be rather masculine than feminine and would be resumed by a spiritual figure hardly visible at all, the headdress winged, the body cloud-veiled and wrapped in mist, as if clouds were rolling over and obscuring the outline, and scarcely permitting the legs and feet to be seen. It represents the spirit of ether. In the Yetziratic world, it would be like a warrior with winged helmet, the face angelic but rather fierce, the body and arms mailed and bearing a child—the legs and feet with mailed buskins and wings attached to them.

In Assiah, this same letter Aleph is terrific energy and represents, as it were, mad force (the shape of the letter is almost that of a swastika). On the human plane, it would represent a person who was a lunatic and at times given to frightful fits of mania. Translated to the elemental plane, it would represent a form whose body fluctuated between a man and an animal, and indeed, the Assiatic form would be a most evil type with a force something like that compounded of that of a bird and that of a demon—an altogether horrible result. The letter Aleph represents spirituality in high things, but when translated to the plane contiguous to or below Assiah is usually something horrible and unbalanced, because it is so opposed to matter that the moment it is involved therein there is no harmony between them.

Radiating forces of divine light, otherwise called angelic forms, have not gender in the grosser acceptation of the term, though they can be classed according to the masculine and feminine sides. As, for example, in the human figure, sex is not so strongly marked in the upper part, the head, as in the body, while yet the countenance can be distinctly classed as of a masculine or a feminine type. So, also, on quitting the material plane, sex becomes less marked, or rather appreciable in a different manner, though the distinction of masculine or feminine is retained. And herein is the great error of the phallic religions—that they have transferred the material and gross side of sex to divine and angelic planes, not understanding that it is the lower that is derived from the higher by correlation in material development, and not the higher from the lower. Gender, in the usual meaning of the term, belongs to the elemental spirits, Kerubic forms, fays, planetary spirits, and Olympic spirits—also to the Qlipoth in its most exaggerated and bestial aspects, and this is a ratio increasing in proportion to the depths of their descent. Also, in certain of the evil elemental spirits, it would be exaggerated and repulsive.

But, in the higher and angelic natures, gender is correlated by forms, either steady and firm or rushing. Firmness like that of a rock or pillar is the nature of the feminine; restlessness and movement, that of the masculine. Therefore, let this be clearly understood in ascribing gender to angelic forms and images. Our tradition classes all forces under the heads of vehement and rushing force, and firm and steady force. Therefore a figure representing the former would be a masculine and that representing the latter, a feminine form.

But for convenience in the formation of telesmatic images of ordinary occult names and words, the letters are arranged in masculine and feminine classification. This classification is not intended to affirm that the letters have not in themselves both natures (seeing that in each letter as in each Sephirah is hidden the dual nature of masculine and feminine) but shows more their tendency as regards the distinction of force beforementioned.

Those, then, are rather masculine than feminine to which are allotted forces more rapid in action. And those, again, are rather feminine than masculine which represent a force more firm and steady whence all letters whose sound is prolonged as if moving forward are rather masculine than feminine. Certain others are epicene, yet incline rather to one nature than to another.

Telesmatic Attributions of the Letters of the Hebrew Alphabet

Aleph.	Spiritual. Wings generally, epicene, rather male than female, rather thin type.
Beth.	Active and slight. Male.
Gimel.	Grey, beautiful yet changeful. Feminine, rather full face and body.
Daleth.	Very beautiful and attractive. Feminine. Rather full face and body.
Heh.	Fierce, strong, rather fiery. Feminine.
Vau.	Steady and strong. Rather heavy and clumsy. Masculine.
Zayin.	Thin, intelligent. Masculine.
Cheth.	Full face, not much expression. Feminine.

Teth.	Rather strong and fiery. Feminine.
Yod.	Very white and rather delicate. Feminine.
Kaph.	Big and strong. Masculine.
Lamed.	Well-proportioned. Feminine.
Mem.	Reflective, dream-like; epicene, but female rather than male.
Nun.	Square determined face. Masculine, rather dark.
Samekh.	Thin rather expressive face. Masculine.
Ayin.	Rather mechanical. Masculine.
Peh.	Fierce, strong, resolute. Feminine.
Tzaddi.	Thoughtful, intellectual. Feminine.
Qoph.	Rather full face. Masculine.
Resh.	Proud and dominant. Masculine.
Shin.	Fierce, active, epicene. Rather male than female.
Tau.	Dark, grey, epicene. Male rather than female.

(These genders are only given as a convenient guide.)

Summary

In the vibration of names concentrate first upon the highest aspirations and upon the whiteness of Kether. Astral vibrations and material alone are dangerous. Concentrate upon your Tiphareth, the centre about the heart, and draw down into it the white rays from above. Formulate the letters in white light in your heart. Inspire deeply, and then pronounce the letters of the name, vibrating each through your whole system—as if setting into vibration the air before you, and as if that vibration spread out into space.

The whiteness should be brilliant.

The sigils are drawn from the lettering of the rose upon the cross,⁴³ and these are in Tiphareth, which corresponds to the heart. Draw them as if the rose were in your heart.

In vibrating any name, pronounce it as many times as it has letters. This is the invoking whirl.

Example: The Vibration of Adonai Ha-Aretz.⁴⁴

Perform the Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram in the four quarters of your room, preceded by the Qabalistic cross. Then in each quarter perform the signs of the Adeptus Minor, saying I.A.O. and L.V.X., making the symbol of the Rose Cross as taught in the paper describing the Rose Cross ritual in Volume III.⁴⁵

Pass to the centre of the room and face east. Then formulate before you in brilliant white flashings the letters of the name in a cross—i.e., both perpendicularly and horizontally as a picture before you extrinsically:

Telesmatic Image of Adonai ha-Aretz

Formulate the perception of Kether above you, and draw down the white light about this cross. Then, taking a deep inspiration, pronounce and vibrate the letters of the name. Flashing brilliant white light should hover round them. This is the expanding whirl in the aura.

Having gained the whiteness, then form the telesmatic image, not in your heart but before you, extending it and encouraging the ideal figure to expand and fill the universe. Then immerse yourself in its rays—and absorbing, also be absorbed by, the brightness of that light until your aura radiates with its brightness.

These, then, are two processes: The invoking whirl related to the heart. The expanding whirl related to the aura.

ADNI makes the figure from head to waist; HA ARTZ from waist to feet. The whole name is related to Malkuth, matter, and Zelatorship.

Aleph.	Winged, white, brilliant, radiant crown.
Daleth.	Head and neck of woman, beautiful but firm, hair long, dark and waving.
Nun.	Arms bare, strong, extended as a cross. In the right hand are ears of corn, and in the left a golden cup. Large dark spreading wings.
Yod.	Deep yellow-green robe covering a strong chest on which is a square lamen of gold with a scarlet Greek cross—in the angles four smaller red crosses.

In addition a broad gold belt on which Adonai ha-Aretz is written in Theban or Hebrew characters.

The feet are shown in flesh colour with golden sandals. Long yellow green drapery rayed with olive reaches to the feet. Beneath are black lurid clouds with patches of colour. Around the figure are lightning flashes, red. The crown radiates white light. A sword is girt at the side of the figure.

Further Concerning the Formation of Telesmatic Images ⁴⁶

Translate the letters of the name of each Sephirah into the numerical equivalents which will be yielded by reference to the Qabalah of Nine Chambers. If these letters and numbers are again translated into their Yetziratic attributions and combined with the lineal figures represented by the numbers, an analysis of the name is obtained compounded of two scales of interpretation.

For instance, in the case of Kether, the letters are Kaph, Tau, Resh. Kaph is referred in the Sepher Yetzirah to Jupiter, Tau to Saturn, and Resh to the sun. Again, the lineal figure of Kaph, which reduces to the number two by Aiq Bkr or the Qabalah of Nine Chambers, will be the cross. Tau reduces to four, whose lineal figure is the square. Resh reduces also to two, symbolized likewise by the cross. There are three letters in the name Kether—which itself, as a whole, may be symbolized by a triangle. If the above symbolic lineal figures are placed within the lineal figure of the whole name, the triangle, “a species of Hieroglyphic form of each Sephirah will result. This may again be represented by a cognate angelic form, as taught in the formation of sigils from the rose.” The Yetziratic attributions will yield the information as to what colours, symbols, etc. are to be used in formulating the image.

The same principle applies to the remaining Sephirotic names.

TALISMANS AND SIGILS

There are innumerable methods of forming sigils for use in connection with talismans and their construction. One method, using the rose of the Zelator Adeptus Minor, has previously been described. In the Order this was the method most often used. Herein will be found methods of forming talismanic emblems and sigils from the kameas of the planets, or their magical squares, and also from the geomantic points and symbols.

So far as the geomantic symbols are concerned, the student will do well to become acquainted with the instruction on geomancy in the section on divination.⁴⁷ After having become fully acquainted with the names of the symbols and their forms, as well as having obtained some experience of divination by that method, let him note that geomantic sigils or talismanic emblems, as they are sometimes called, are formed from the geomantic figures by drawing various lines from point to point. These characters are then attributed to their ruling planets and ideas. The simplest form of each will be found in the diagram below.

Puer	Amissio	Albus	Populus

Via	Fortuna Major	Fortuna Minor	Puella

Rubeus	Acquisitio	Carcer	Tristitia

Laetitia	Conjunctio	Caput Draconis	Cauda Draconis

Geomantic Sigils

Innumerable more sigils, and a host of other designs, may be formed from the fundamental geomantic symbols. As many as ten or a dozen different emblems may be derived from two or three of the symbols. If the student uses a little ingenuity and imagination in this matter, he will discover quite a lot as to the nature and import of sigils. The significance of the emblems may be divined, from one point of view, by employing them as “doors” through which to skry in the spirit vision. More can be learned this way concerning the real implication of sigils than almost by any other method.

The signatures and seals of the angels and genii who rule over each of the symbols may be found in the full instruction on geomancy. Those seals and sigils are highly important, and some place should be found for them on the talisman.

The student should make a number of experiments drawing harmonious and balanced talismans, even when it is not his intention to use and consecrate them. After drawing a half a dozen rough sketches, he will almost as though by accident stumble upon the “knack” of drawing the “right” kind of talisman. In the Key of King Solomon, translated by McGregor Mathers, may be found samples of about forty different types of talismans attributed to the planets. These should be consulted, for they will convey quite a little as to how symbols should be drawn. But they should not be followed or copied. Talismans should be personal things, made for personal ends, and based upon individual needs and conceptions.

The following important characters—letters of the angelic or Enochian alphabet—are attributed to the seven rulers in the twelve signs and the sixteen figures in geomancy.

Ω	Signifies Muriel and Populus, a figure of Chasmodai or Luna in Cancer increasing.
Ⓒ	Signifies Muriel and Via, a figure of Chasmodai and Luna in Cancer decreasing.
♄	Signifies Verchiel or Fortuna Major, a figure of Sorath or the sun in northern declination.
♅	Signifies Verchiel or Fortuna Minor, a figure of Sorath or the sun in southern declination.
♆	Signifies Hamaliel or Conjunctio, a figure of Taphthartharath or Mercury in Virgo.
♇	Signifies Zuriel or Puella, a figure of Kedemel or Venus in Libra.
♈	Signifies Barchiel or Rubeus, a figure of Bartzabel or Mars in Scorpio.
♉	Signifies Advachiel or Acquisitio, a figure of Hismael or Jupiter in Sagittarius.
♊	Signifies Hanael or Career, a figure of Zazel or Saturn in Capricorn.
♋	Signifies Cambriel or Tristitia, a figure of Zazel or Saturn in Aquarius.
♌	Signifies Amnitzel or Laetitia, a figure of Hismael or Jupiter in Pisces.
✂	Signifies Zazel and Bartzabel in all their ideals, being Cauda Draconis.
✓	Signifies Hismael and Kedemel in all their ideas, being a figure of Caput Draconis.

	Signifies Melchidael or Puer, a figure of Bartzabel or Mars in Aries.
7	Signifies Asmodel and Amissio, a figure of Kedemel or Venus in Taurus.
7	Signifies Ambriel or Albus, a figure of Taphthartharath or Mercury in Gemini. ⁴⁸

A mode of using the talismanic forms drawn from the geomantic figures is to take those yielded by the figures under the planet required and to place them at opposite ends of a wheel of eight radii as shown below. A versicle suitable to the matter may then be written within the double circle. Occasionally, a square of any convenient number of compartments may be substituted for the wheel or one form may be used for the obverse and the other for the reverse of the talisman.

Geomantic Talismans

Another very important mode of forming sigils anciently was through the medium of the kameas of the planets, or the magical squares. Magical squares are arrangements of numbers so arranged as to yield the same number when added horizontally, vertically, or diagonally. Also the sum of the total of all the numbers in the square is a number of special significance to the planet to which that square is referred.

The method of forming sigils from these is very simple. The knowledge of how this was done, however, had, during the time of my membership in the Order, completely faded from memory, and none of the members or the chiefs of the temple could give any information. Yet this was the principal method employed by the traditional authorities in obtaining sigils. The method of using the Rose Cross is an anachronism, and while in certain instances it is very useful or perhaps the most convenient mode, it has no root in antiquity. Not only had the knowledge of sigils from the kameas faded from the order, but the chiefs even eliminated the magical squares from the knowledge lectures. It was claimed that a number of mistakes had crept into the numbers on the squares. Had they known it, the method and the correct form of the squares were in certain books and manuscripts in the British Museum. None of them, however, made the least attempt to recover the true or accurate form of the kameas.

The sole requisite to tracing sigils of the planetary names formed from the kameas is Aiq Beker, or the Qabalah of Nine Chambers. (Incidentally, this too was eliminated from the knowledge lectures.) By this method, the letters of the Hebrew alphabet are grouped together according to the similarity of their numbers. Thus in one chamber, Gimel, Lamed, and Shin are placed; their numbers are similar—3, 30, and 300. The same rule applies to the others. The name of the method obtains from the letters placed in the first two chambers. In the first chamber are Aleph, Yod, and Qoph, whose numbers are 1, 10, and 100, while in the second chamber are Beth, Caph, Resh—2, 20, and 200—thus Aiq Bkr. The usual form is given below; while there is another method of using the same grouping of letters and numbers but placing them in chambers referred to the Sephiroth.

ש	ל	ג	ק	כ	ב	פ	צ	א
600	60	6	500	50	5	400	40	4
ז	ז	ו	ד	נ	ה	ה	מ	ד
900	90	9	800	80	8	700	70	7
י	צ	ט	ק	פ	ח	ו	ע	ז

Now in order to find the sigil of a name by using the kamea, it is necessary to reduce those letters and their numbers to tens or units by means of the above quoted scheme. For example, in the case, say, of Zazel, the spirit of Saturn, the letters are Zayin seven, Aleph one, Zayin seven, and Lamed thirty. The only letter which requires reduction in this instance will be Lamed which reduces to three. The next step is to trace a line on the square following the succession of numbers. Thus, in the name of Zazel, the line will follow the numbers seven, one, return to seven again, and then to three. A little circle should be placed on the first letter of the sigil to show where the name begins.

The so-called seal or sigil of the planet is a symmetrical design so arranged that its lines pass through every number on the square. The seal thus becomes an epitome or synthesis of the kamea.

Below are given the kameas of the seven planets together with the traditional seals of their planets, intelligences, and spirits. The student will do well to attempt to work these out himself. I shall give one more example of a more difficult kind, in order that no misunderstanding may exist about the method of sigil formation.

The name Taphthartharath is the spirit of Mercury, and his sigil would be traced upon the magical square having sixty-four squares, eight on each side. The attribution of squares to planets follows the attribution of the Sephiroth on the Tree of Life; thus Mercury is referred to the eighth Sephirah Hod. Now Taphthartharath is composed of seven letters, Tau 400, Peh 80, Tau 400, Resh 200, Tau 400, Resh 200, and Tau 400. This will reduce by Aiq Beker to 40, 8, 40, 20, 40, 20, 40. A continuous line will be traced beginning with a circle in the square of 40, and moving to each of the numbers quoted. All the other sigils follow this same rule.

There are also appended the sigils and attributions of the Olympic planetary spirits. Nothing was known in the Order about them, and they too were extirpated from the papers. More information may be found in the Heptameron of Pietro de Abano. These sigils should be used for skrying as a means of acquiring knowledge as to their nature, using the appropriate planetary divine names.

Sigils of the Olympic Spirits

So far as concerns the foregoing sigils, tradition has it that the spirits are evil, the intelligences good. The seals and names of the intelligences should be used on all talismans for a good effect. Those of the spirits of the planets serve for evil, and should therefore not be used in any operation of a beneficial kind. The tradition however implies usually by an evil force, such as the spirits of the planets, a blind force, which contrary to popular notion can be used to good and beneficial ends when employed under the presidency of their immediate superiors, the good intelligences. Thus to make use of, when it is absolutely necessary to do so, the sigils of the spirits, the seals and names of the intelligences should be inscribed on the same talisman as well.

In addition to the seals, sigils, and emblems, it is customary to inscribe on talismans and pentacles the appropriate lineal figures. In the formation of a magical talisman or pentacle, consider first of all under what planet, sign, or element the matter falls. The next step is to collect all the names of the Sephirah to which it is attributed, as well as those of its archangels, angels, intelligences, etc. Also the seals, sigils, numbers, lineal figures, geomantic characters, etc., thereto belonging. Then, with all this material before you, classify and arrange.

The following notes are an abridged version of “Polygons and Polygrams,” a highly illuminating document circulated in the Outer Order. It should be closely studied, for it throws great light not only on the matter of lineal figures but on the whole abstruse number philosophy of the Qabalah.

POLYGONS AND POLYGRAMS

The point within the circle represents the operation of Kether in general, and the cross within the circle that of Chokmah, for therein are the roots of wisdom. In using these lineal figures in the formation of talismans under the Sephiroth, remember that:

The point within the circle = Kether

The cross within the circle = Chokmah

The triangle within the circle = Binah

The square within the circle = Chesed and that the remaining Sephiroth should have the double, treble, or quadruple forms of their lineal figures bound together in their talismans. For example, in the heptangle for Netzach, the heptagon and the two forms of the heptagram should be united in the same talisman, the extremities of the angles coinciding.

The endekangle is attributed to the Qlippoth, the dodekangle to zodiacal forces in Malkuth. Kether hath the Primum Mobile, Chokmah the sphere of the zodiac in command, and Malkuth that of the elements.

And many other meanings are bound together in the lineal figures besides those which are given in this book. Two or more different lineal figures may be bound together in the same talisman.

The triangle is the only lineal figure into which all surfaces can be reduced, for every polygon can be divided into triangles by drawing lines from its angles to its centre; and the triangle is the first and simplest of all lineal figures. It refers to the triad operating in all things, to the three supernal Sephiroth and to Binah, the third Sephirah, in particular.

Among the planets it is especially referred to Saturn, and among the elements to fire, and, as the colour of Saturn is black, and that of fire red, the black triangle will represent Saturn, and the red, fire. The three angles also symbolize the three alchemical principles of nature: salt, sulphur, and mercury.

The square is an important lineal figure, which naturally represents stability and equation. It includes the idea of surface and superficial measurement. It refers to the quaternary in all things, and to the tetrad of the holy name YHVH operating through the four elements of fire, water, air, and earth. It is allotted to Chesed, the fourth Sephirah, and among the planets to Jupiter. And as representing the four elements, it represents their ultimatum in the material form.

The pentangle can be traced in two ways: reflected from every second point, when it is called the pentagon, and reflected from every third point when it is called the pentagram. The pentangle as a whole is referred to the fifth Sephirah, Geburah. The pentagon naturally represents the power of the pentad, operating in nature by the dispersal of the spirit and the four elements through it.

The pentagram with a single point upwards is called the “sign of the microcosm,” and is a good symbol, representing man with his arms and legs extended adoring his Creator, and especially the dominion of the spirit over the four elements, and consequently of reason over matter. But with the single point downwards it is a very evil symbol: the head of the goat, or demon’s head, representing the abasement of reason beneath the blind forces of matter, the elevation of anarchy above order, and of conflicting forces driven by chance above God.

It represents the concentrated force of the spirit and the four elements governed by the five letters of the name of the restorer of all things YHShVH, and it is especially attributed to the planet Mars. It also shows the Kerubim and the wheel of the spirit. It is a symbol of tremendous force, and of Heh, the letter of the great supernal mother AIMA.

Hexagon and Hexagram

The hexangle can be traced in two ways as a complete symbol: viz, reflected from every second point, when it is called the hexagon, and reflected from every third point when it is called the hexagram. The hexangle as a whole is referred to the sixth Sephirah Tiphareth. The hexangle naturally represents the powers of the hexad operating in nature, by the dispersal of the rays of the planets, and of the zodiac emanating from the sun. The number of degrees of a great circle cut off between its angles is sixty, forming the astrological sextile aspect, powerful for good. It is not so consonant to the sun nature as the hexagram, and remember thou, that the 'gon signifieth dispersion, distribution, and radiation of a force; but the 'gram concentration. Hence use thou the 'gon for spreading, and the 'gram for concentration and sealing; and when there is need, thou canst compare, interpose, and combine them; but the 'gon initiateth the whirl.

The hexagram with a single point uppermost is called the “sign of the macrocosm,” or greater world, because its six angles fitly represent the six days or periods of creation evolved from the manifestation of the Triune; while its synthesis forms the seventh day, a period of rest, summed up in the hexagonal centre.

It represents especially the concentrated force of the planets, acting through the signs of the zodiac, and thus sealing the astral image of nature under the presidency of the Sephiroth; and also the seven palaces of the same. It is especially attributable to the sun.

It is a symbol of great strength and power, forming, with the cross and the pentagram, a triad of potent and good symbols, which are in harmony with each other.

Heptagon and Heptagrams

The heptangle as a whole is referred to the seventh Sephirah, Netzach.

The heptagon naturally represents the dispersal of the powers of the seven planets through the week and through the year. It alludes to the power of the septenary acting through all things, as exemplified by the seven colours of the rainbow.

The heptagram reflected from every third point yieldeth seven triangles at the apices thereof; fitly representing the triad operating in each planet, and the planets themselves in the week and the year.

The heptagram is the star of Venus, and is especially applicable to her nature. And as the heptagram is the lineal figure of the seven planets, so is Venus as it were their gate or entrance, the fitting symbol of the Isis of nature, and of the seven lower Sephiroth of the Bride.

Octagon and Octagrams

The octangle as a whole is referred to the eighth Sephirah, Hod. The octangle naturally represents the power of the ogdoad, and the octagon showeth the ogdoad operating in nature by the dispersal of the rays of the elements in their dual aspect under the presidency of the eight letters of the name.

The octagram reflected from every third point yields eight triangles at the apices thereof; fitly representing the triad operating in each element in its dual form, i.e., of positive and negative, under the powers of the name YHVH ADONAI or as it is written bound together IAHDONHI.

This octagram reflected from every fourth point is the star of Mercury, and is especially applicable to his nature. It is further a potent symbol, representing the binding together of the concentrated positive and negative forces of the elements under the name of IAHDONHI. And forget not that Adonai is the key of YHVH.

The enneangle as a whole is referred to the ninth Sephirah Yesod. It naturally representeth the power of the ennead, and the enneagon showeth the ennead operating in nature by the dispersal of the rays of the seven planets and of the head and tail of the dragon of the moon.

The enneagram reflected from every third point representeth the triple ternary operating both in the seven planets with the Caput and Cauda Draconis of the moon, and with the alchemical principles counter-changed and interwoven. It is not so consonant with the nature of Luna as the enneagram reflected from every fifth point.

The enneagram is the star of Luna, and is especially applicable to her nature. It represents her as the administratrix to the Earth of the virtues of the solar system under the Sephiroth.

The enneagram reflected from every fourth point is composed of three triangles united within a circle, and alludes to the triple ternary of the three alchemical principles themselves. It is not so consonant with the nature of Luna as the previous form.

Dekagon and Dekagrams

The dekangle as a whole is referred to the tenth Sephirah—Malkuth. The dekangle naturally represents the power of the dekad, and the dekagon showeth the dekad operating in nature by the dispersal of the rays of the ten Sephiroth therein. The number of degrees of a great circle cut off between its angles is thirty-six, the half of the quintile astrological aspect.

The dekagram reflected from every third point is especially consonant with Malkuth, and shows the triad operating through the angle of the two pentagons within a circle, of which it is composed. It alludes to the combination of the three alchemical principles with the spirit and the four elements in their positive and negative form, under the presidency of the ten Sephiroth themselves.

The dekagram reflected from every fifth point is composed of two pentagrams within a circle. It shows the operation of the duplicated Heh of the Tetragrammaton, and the concentration of the positive and negative forces of the spirit and of the four elements under the presidency of the potencies of the dive in Binah; the revolutions of the forces under Aimah the great mother.

Endekagrams

The endekagram as a general rule is referred to the Qlippoth: of its forms however, the one reflected from every fourth point represents their restriction, and therefore it is not altogether to be classed with those that represent their operations in nature. The endekangle naturally represents the evil and imperfect nature of the endekad, and the endekagon represents the dispersal of the eleven curses of Mount Ebal through the universe (Deuteronomy 27).⁴⁹

Dodekagon

Dodekangles

The dodekangle as a general rule is referred to the zodiac, and naturally represents the power of the dodekad.

The dodekagon shows the dispersal of the influence of the zodiac through nature, the dodekagram its concentration. The number of degrees of a great circle cut off between its angles is thirty, forming the weak astrological semi-sextile aspect, good in nature and operation.

ADDITIONAL LECTURE ON THE TATTWAS OF THE EASTERN SCHOOL

Introduction by Israel Regardie

This paper dealing with the Hindu tattwa system was withdrawn from circulation in that branch of the Order of which I happened to be a member. The copy from which I have reproduced the following was properly labelled and dated August 1894, and is therefore as clearly authoritative as any of the Order papers could be, indicating that it was formally and officially issued to all members of the grade of Philosophus. It has also been conveyed to me that the American temples, under the Mathers and Brodie Innes jurisdiction, circulated this document.

As to whether it accords with the general content of the rest of the Order system must be left to the discrimination of the individual student. That it has several points of value will be doubted by none, though few will care to subscribe to the paper in its entirety. Personally, I feel it to be definitely an alien system, which touches the Order teaching in but very few places. The mode of skrying in the spirit vision using the tattwa symbols is sound enough and has been described elsewhere. But other aspects suggest that the two systems are not likely to mix particularly well.

Some students who are familiar with early Theosophical literature will recall a book, Nature's Finer Forces or the Science of Breath by Rama Prasad, and it may occur to them that this "Additional Lecture on the Tattwas of the Eastern School" is in reality a precis of that book.⁵⁰ This has been observed by quite a number of the early Order people, and I understand that because of this, and because of the fact that no acknowledgement of the book was made in the document, Frater Sub Spe withdrew the document.

I have decided to issue it here, with the other Order manuscripts, as it may convey for some minds a special message which may be absent in the others. In any event, it seems to me that I have no right to extirpate from an account of Order teaching a paper which was considered highly important by some of the early Order Adepts.

The Tattwas of the Eastern School

General Observation. There are five tattwas or principles:

1. Akasa—ether.
2. Vayu—the aerial principle.
3. Tejas—the principle of light and heat.
4. Apas—the watery principle.
5. Prithivi—the earthy principle.

But the first cause of these is the great controller of all things, the one light, the formless. From Him first came into appearance ether; thence the air, the motion producing ether waves which causes light and heat, and so on in the above order.

The yogi comes to know the principle of these five tattwas, their Sukshma Sharira, but how? Further on you will see how. The astrologer who has no knowledge of the swara is as worthless as a man without a wife. It is the soul itself; it is the swara, the great controller of all, who creates, preserves, and destroys, and causes whatsoever is in this world. Experience and tradition both say no knowledge is more precious than this knowledge of the swara. None else lays bare the workings of the machinery of this world, or the secret workings of this world.

By the power of swara may be destroyed an enemy. Power, wealth, and pleasure, all these can be commanded by swara. The beginner in our science must be pure and calm in mind and in thought, virtuous in actions, and having unmixed faith in his spiritual teacher. He must be strong in his determination, and grateful.

Swara in the Body. Ten manifestations of this swara are in the body. But before the Neophyte is told this, he must gain a thorough knowledge of the nervous system. This is very important, and according to his knowledge of this science, the Neophyte gains success. To give a rough outline of the parts we have chiefly to deal with in our endeavour to explain the elementary treatise: There are ten principal nerves, this includes the tubes, etc. It is in the ten manifestations of swara that the ten so-called vayus move. We mean by this ten forces which perform ten different functions. The three most important nerves are the following, as the beginner has only to deal with these:

1. Ida—the left bronchus.
2. Pingala—the right bronchus.
3. Sushumna—in the middle.

The ten Vayus are:

1. Prana, in the breast.
2. Apana, about the excretory organs.
3. Samana, in the navel.
4. Undana, middle of the throat.
5. Vyana, pervading the whole body.
6. Kurmana, the eyes, helping them open.
7. Kirkala, in the stomach, producing hunger.
8. Nag, whence comes vomiting.
9. Devadatta, causes yawning.
10. Dhananjaya, that which doth not leave the body after death.

These ten Vayus, or forces, have their play in the ten principal nerves, not one in each. They are the regulators of the body of man. If they go on working properly, a man remains perfectly healthy; if not, different kinds of diseases spring up.

A yogi keeps them always working, and consequently diseases never come to him. The key to all these nerves lies in the working of the prana vayu, or vital principle drawing the air through the Ida, the Pingala, and the Sushumna. When the air is drawn through the Ida it is felt coming out or going in through the left nostril. When through the Pingala, in the right nostril. When through the Sushumna it is felt through both nostrils simultaneously. The air is drawn or felt through either or both of the nostrils at certain appointed times. Whenever in any given time, the breath goes in and comes out of the wrong nostril it is a sure sign some sort of disease is coming on.

The Ida is sometimes called the Chandra nadi, or the moon nerve. The Pingala, the Surya nadi or sun nerve. These are called, the former, the Chandra swara and the latter the Surya swara.

The reason is that when the breath is in the Ida it gives coolness to the body and that when in the Pingala it gives heat to the body. The ancient magi used to say the place of the moon in the human body was in Ida and the sun in Pingala.

The Course of the Breath. The lunar month, it is well known, is divided into two parts, the fortnight of the waxing and the fortnight of the waning. On the first fortnight, or the bright fortnight, just at sunrise of the first day the breath must come into the left nostril and must be so for three days successively. At the beginning of the fourth day the breath must come through the right nostril and must do so for the three succeeding days, when again the seventh day must begin with the moon breath, and so on in the same order. Thus we have said that such and such days begin with such and such a breath.

But how long is our breath to remain in one nostril? For five gharis, or two hours. Thus when the first day of the bright fortnight begins with the moon breath, after five gharis, the sun breath must set in, and this again must change into the moon breath after the same interval of time. So on for every day.

Again, the first day of the dark fortnight must begin with the sun breath, and proceed in the same way, changing after five gharis and the three succeeding days. It will be seen that all the days of the month have been divided into the Ida and the Pingala. In the Sushumna, the swara flows only when it changes, either in its natural course or in certain other conditions to be afterwards mentioned. This is the course of nature. But a yogi commands nature. He turns everything into his own way. Rules for this will be given in the proper place.

Course of the Tattwas

For five gharis, as we have above said, the breath flows through our nostrils. In these five gharis, or two hour periods, the tattwas have their course. In the first we have Akasa, in the second Vayu, in the third Tejas, in the fourth Apas, in the fifth Prithivi. Thus in one night and day, or sixty gharis, we have twelve courses of these five tattwas each remaining one ghari and returning again in two hours. There are again further five subdivisions of each tattwa in a ghari. Thus, Akasa is subdivided into Akas-Akasa; Akas-Vayu; Akas-Tejas; Akas-Apas; Akas-Prithivi—and similarly with the other four.

How to know which of the tattwas is at a certain time in course, not merely by a mathematical calculation but with the certainty of an eyewitness, is of the greatest importance in the practical part of this science. We shall come to it further on.

The Ida. When the breath is in Ida, that is in the left nostril: then only is it well to perform the following actions. Stable works such as erecting a building or the construction of a well or tank, going on a distant journey, entering a new house, collection of things, giving gifts, marriage, making jewels or clothes, taking medicines and tonics, seeing a superior or master for any purpose of trade, amassing of wealth, sowing of seed in a field, negotiations, commencement of trade, seeing of friends, works of charity and faith, going home, buying of animals, doing work for the benefit of others, placing money on security, singing, dancing, taking up abode in any village or city, drinking or making water at the time of sorrow, pain, fever, etc. All these acts should be done when the swara is in Ida. It must however be kept in mind that the tattwas Vayu and Tejas are to be excluded from these actions, likewise Akasa.

During the tattwas Prithivi and Apas only are these actions to be done. In a fever, the yogi keeps his Chandra swara going, and brings the Apas or water tattwa in course, so the fever is all over in a very short time. How mastery is gained over the tattwas will come further on.

The Pingala. In the Surya swara only, are the following actions to be done: Reading and teaching hard and difficult subjects of knowledge, sexual intercourse, shipping, hunting, mounting a hill or fort, riding a donkey or camel or horse, swimming over a powerful stream or river, writing, painting, buying and selling, fighting with swords or hands, seeing a king, bathing, eating, shaving, bleeding, sleeping—and such like. All these secure success and health, as the case may be, if done in the Surya swara.

The Sushumna. When the breath comes out of both nostrils at the same time, it is flowing in the Sushumna. Nothing ought to be done under these conditions, for everything turns out badly. The same is the case when the breath is now in one and now in the other nostril. When this is the case, sit down and meditate upon or over the sacred Hansa. This joining of the breath is the only time for Sandha, meditation.

Note. Zanoni secured success in gaming for Cetoxa and overcame the effects of the poisoned wine of the Prince di D_____ as follows. In the first place, he changed his breath to the right nostril and threw an envelope of the Akasa tattwa over his antagonist, who consequently became all empty, the money in gaming flowing towards the Surya swara. In the latter case he brought the water, Apas, tattwa into course, directed it with the full force of his trained will towards the poisoned wine, and consequently the burning heat of the poison was counteracted for a very long time, and before it could recover strength enough to act on the system, it was there no longer.⁵¹

The Tattwas

To each of the five tattwas a special colour has been assigned. Akasa—black; dark; or no colour really. Vayu—green (blue by some). Tejas—red. Apas—white, or really all colours. Prithivi—yellow. It is by these colours that a practical man finds on the spur of the moment which tattwa is at the time in course. Besides, these tattwas have different shapes and tastes. These figures are seen by taking a bright mirror and letting the breath fall upon it, as it comes out of the nose. The divided part takes one of the following forms according to the tattwa then in course. Prithivi—a figure having four angles. Apas—a half moon, or crescent. Tejas—triangular. Vayu—spherical. Akasa—oval like a human ear. To sum up their qualities:

Prithivi—moves always in the middle of the paths of air and water. Apas—downwards, straight through the nose. Tejas—upwards. Vayu—obliquely towards the right or left arm, as the case may be. Akasa—transversely always.

Tattwa	Color	Form	Taste	Distance of Breath Below Nose	Natural Principle
Prithivi	yellow	having four angles	sweet	12 fingers	bulky
Apas	white or all colors	half moon	astringent	16 fingers	cold
Vayu	green or blue	sphere	acid	8 fingers	always in motion
Tejas	red	triangle	hot tastes such as pepper, etc.	4 fingers	hot
Akasa	black, dark, or no color	human ear, oval, egg	bitter	upwards	universally pervading

Tests of the Tattwas. For practice, let a man take five little bullets or counters coloured red, yellow, green or blue, white or silver, and black, and place or carry them in his pocket. Now let him close his eyes and take one of them out of his pocket. The colour of the bullet will be that of the tattwa then in course. Whilst still keeping the eyes closed, let him see if the colour of the bullet floats before them.

He must not suppose he will be correct all at once. By and by the confusion will disappear, and colours well-defined, staying for the proper length of time, will begin to come before him, and the colour of the bullet will be the same as that seen before his eyes. And then he will have gained the power of knowing which of the tattwas is in course, and can at pleasure find them.

There is a particular method of concentrating the mind and practising with the eyes for this purpose, which will come with practice.

Let him ask any of his friends to imagine one of the five colours, say a flower. He will only have to shut his eyes to find the tattwa then in course, and he can astonish his friends by naming the colour. Again, if a man sitting amongst his friends finds the Vayu tattwa set in, let him be sure that those of his friends who are in perfect health and in a normal state both of body and mind, wish to go away. Let him ask them to say frankly, and they will answer “yes.”

In what way other tattwas affect both the body and mind of man will be stated in another place. Some higher secrets are purposely reserved for those who safely and honestly pass the elementary stage. When the man has reached the stage of finding at will any of the tattwas, let him not imagine he has become perfect.

If he goes on practising, his inward sight becomes keener, and he will recognize the five subdivisions of the tattwas. On and on let him go with his meditation, and innumerable shades of colour will be recognized according to the different proportions of the tattwas. Whilst during these intervals he is trying to distinguish between the different shades of the colours, his work will be for a time very tedious. We say tedious at first, because when the thousand shades of colour become fixed and defined in his eyes by perseverance and practice, he will have before his eyes an everchanging prospect of colour of the most beautiful shades, and this for a time will be sufficient food for his mind.

To avoid the tediousness, let him meditate upon his breath, as is laid down in the chapter of meditation of the tattwas.

Action to be done during the different tattwas. Actions of a sedate and stable nature are those of the sort enumerated under the Chandra swara, to be done when Prithivi the earthy principle is in course. Those of a fleeting nature, which are to be done and gone through very soon, are to be done during Apas. Actions of a hard nature, those in which a man has to make violent struggle to hold his own, are to be done during Tejas. If a yogi wishes to kill a man he must try to do so with the Vayu tattwa. In the Akasa, nothing should be done but meditation, as works begun during this always end badly. Works of the above nature only prosper in the tattwas specified; and those whose actions prosper may see this by experiment.

Meditation and Mastery Over the Tattwas

We have previously given summary rules for distinguishing the various colours of the different tattwas which are of great use to the beginner. But now we are going to explain the final method of mastering the tattwas and of practising. This is a secret which was only imparted to the most promising adepts of yoga. But a short practice will fully show the important results to be gained by this practice.

The student will by degrees become able to look into futurity at will, and have all the visible world before his eyes, and he will be able to command nature.

During the day, when the sky is clear, let him once or twice for about an hour or two withdraw his mind from all external things; and sitting on an easy chair, let him fix his eyes on any particular part of the blue sky, and go on looking at it without allowing them to twinkle. At first he will see the waves of the water, this is the watery vapour in the atmosphere which surrounds the whole world. Some days later, as the eyes become practiced, he will see different sorts of buildings and so on in the air, and many other wonderful things as well. When the Neophyte reaches this stage of practice, he is sure of gaining success.

After this he will see different sorts of mixed colours of tattwas in the sky, which will after a constant and resolute practice show themselves in their proper and respective colours.

To test the truth of this, the neophyte during the practice should occasionally close his eyes and compare the colour floating in the sky with that which he sees inwardly. When both are the same the operation is right. Other tests we have given before, and other wonders resulting from this will of themselves present themselves to the yogi. This practice is to be done in the daytime.

For the night, let the student rise about two o'clock in the morning, when everything is calm, when there is no noise, and when the cold light of the stars breathe holiness, and a calm rapture enters into the soul of man. Let him wash his hands, feet, the crown of his head, and the nape of his neck with cold water. Let him put his shin bones on the ground, and let the back of his thighs touch his calves, and let him put his hands upon his knees, the fingers pointing towards the body. Let him now fix his eyes on the tip of his nose. To avoid tediousness, he must always, especially during the meditation, meditate upon his breath, coming in and going out.

Besides the above, this has many other advantages given elsewhere. It may here be said that by constant practice of this meditation over his breath, the man is to develop two distinct syllables in his thought. It is evident that when a man draws his breath in, a sound is produced which is imitated in Han. When out, the sound Sa. By constant practise, the going in and coming out of the breath is so much connected with these sounds that without any effort the mind understands Han-Sa with the production of these sounds. Thus we see that one full breath makes Han-Sa, this is the name of the ruler of the universe, together with his powers. They are exerted in the working out of natural phenomena. At this stage of perfection, the yogi should commence as follows:

Getting up at two or three in the morning, and washing himself in the aforementioned manner, let him know and fix his mind upon the tattwa then in course. If the tattwa in course be then Prithivi, let him think of it as something having four angles, a good yellow colour, sweet smelling, small in body, and taking away all diseases. Let him at the same time repeat the word Lam. It is very easy to imagine such a thing.

If it be the Apas tattwa, let him imagine something of the shape and brightness of the half moon, putting down heat and thirst, and that he is immersed in the ocean of water. Let him at that time repeat the word Vam.

If the tattwa be Tejas, let him imagine it as something triangular in shape, shedding a red glare, consuming food and drink, burning away everything, and thus making itself unbearable. At the same time let him repeat Ram.

If the tattwa be Vayu, let him imagine it as something of a spherical shape, of a colour green, or blue, like the green leaves of a tree after rain, and carrying him with a mighty power away from the ground and flying in space like the birds. And let him repeat the syllable Pam.

If the Tattwa be Akasa, let him imagine it as having no shape but giving forth a brilliant light, and let him repeat the syllable Ham. By diligent practice, these syllables uttered by the tongue of a yogi become inseparable from the tattwas. When he repeats any of these, the special tattwa appears with as much force as he may will, and thus it is that a yogi can cause whatever he likes, lightning, rain, wind, and so forth.

Cure of Diseases

Every disease causes the breath to flow out of the wrong nostril, and the wrong tattwa to come into course. When the breath therefore is restored to the proper nostril, and the proper tattwa has been brought into course, let not anyone expect that all that is necessary has been done. If the disease be obstinate and the attack a very violent one, the man will have to persevere in battle a very long time before he conquers.

If a beginner cannot succeed very soon, let him aid the power of his breath by a suitable medicine, and swara will be restored very soon.

It may be noticed that the Chandra swara is generally the best for all diseases. Its flow is an indication of the soundness of health. In cold, cough, and other diseases, this breath ought to flow.

Of the tattwas as well as of the swaras, no one causes pain if it goes on properly. In this state it ought not generally to be meddled with. But when any one gains an undue predominance and causes diseases, it ought to be at once changed. Experience shows that the Apas and the Prithivi tattwas are the only ones generally good for health, and indeed, the fact that during the course of the Apas tattwa the breath is felt sixteen fingers breadth below the nose, and during the Prithivi twelve fingers, argues at those times a more sound and powerful working of the functions of the body, than when it is felt only eight, or four, or no finger-breadth below the nose.

Akasa therefore is the worst for health, and in a state of ill-health, a man will generally find in course, either Akasa, Vayu, or Tejas.

Let him therefore, when need be, proceed in the following manner. After having changed his breath from the wrong nostril to the proper one, generally the left, and pressing the opposite side by a cushion so that it may not change again, let the man sit on an easy chair and bind his left thigh a little above the knee joint with his handkerchief. In a short time, whose length varies inversely as the deficiency of practice, and directly as the violence of the disease, he will perceive that the tattwa changes to the one immediately below it and so on; and then the next, and so forth. If he be an acute observer of the conditions of his body, he will perceive that slowly his mind is becoming more and more easy. Let him tighten his bandage still more if need be. When at last he reaches the Prithivi tattwa, he will find in the state of his health a great change for the better. Let him preserve in this state, or, still better, the Apas tattwa for some time, and return to it occasionally for some days, even after the attacks of the disease have ceased. He will no doubt be cured.

Forecast of Futurity

Although a yogi obtains the power of knowing everything that is, has been, or is to be, beyond the reach of the senses, yet generally he becomes indifferent to such knowledge, forgetting himself, as he does, in his eternal presence before the light which breathes beauty into all we see in the world. We shall therefore represent him here revealing if not all his knowledge of futurity, only on questions being put to him by others. But our Neophytes may as well put the questions themselves, and then answer them according to the laws here laid down.

When a man comes and says to the yogi that he has a question to ask, let him see which of the tattwas is in course.

(a) If the tattwa be Prithivi, the question is about some root, something belonging to the vegetable kingdom, or something in which the earthy nature is predominant.

(b) If it be Apas, it is about some life, birth, death, etc.

(c) If Tejas, the question is of metals, gain or loss, etc.

(d) If Akasa, he means to ask nothing.

(e) If Vayu, about some journey.

These are but elementary things. The practical yogi who can distinguish between the mixture of the tattwas can name the particular things.

Now let him see through which of his nostrils the breath is flowing, which is the fortnight then in course of passing, which the days, and what direction of himself, the enquirer.

If the breath comes through the left nostril, to, secure complete success in the work which makes the subject of the question, and which will be of the sort specified under Ida, he must have the following coincidences: The fortnight must be bright, that is of the waxing moon; the day must be even, 2, 4, 6, and so on; the direction must be east or north. If these things coincide the man will get what he wants.

Again, if the Surya swara coincide with the dark fortnight, the day odd, the direction south and west, the same result may be predicted but not so thoroughly. The action will be of the sort prescribed under Pingala.

According as any of these do not coincide, will the success be more or less imperfect. It must be remembered that the breath at the time must not be flowing through the wrong nostril. This has many bad consequences; we only just touch the subject.

Of the wrong swara. If at the commencement of the day the wrong swara arises, the lunar for the solar, and vice versa, a man may expect something wrong. If it happens the first day, there is sure to be some sort of mental uneasiness. If the second, some loss of wealth. If the third, a journey will come. If the fourth, some dear object will be destroyed. If the fifth, loss of kingdom. If the sixth, loss of everything. If the seventh, illness and pain sure to come. If the eighth, death.

If the sun breath flows in the morning and at noon and the moon in the evening, a sad discomfiture will be the result, the reverse being a sign of victory.

If a man, going to travel, raises his foot which coincides in direction with the empty nostril at the time being, he will not get what he desires from his travels.

BOOK EIGHT

Divination

GEOMANCY

Chapter One

The figures of geomancy consist of various groupings of odd and even points in four lines. Of these the greatest possible number of combinations is sixteen. Therefore these sixteen combinations of odd and even points arranged on four lines are the sixteen figures of geomancy. These are again classed under the heads of the elements, the signs of the zodiac, and the planets ruling these. Two figures are attributed to each of the seven planets, while the remainder are attributed to Caput and Cauda Draconis—the head and tail of the dragon, or the north and south nodes of the moon. Furthermore, to each planet and sign certain ruling genii are attributed, as shown on pages 660 and 661.

Chapter Two

Roughly speaking, the mode of obtaining the first four geomantic figures, from which the remainder of the divination is calculated, is by marking down at random on paper with a pencil held by a loosely tensed hand sixteen lines of points or dashes, without counting the number placed in each line during the operation. And all the time thinking fixedly of the subject of the demand. When the sixteen lines are completed, the number of points in each line should be added up, and if the result be odd a single point or cross should be made in the first of the three compartments to the right of the paper. If even, two points or crosses. These sixteen lines will then yield four geomantic figures. The results, odd and/or even, of lines one to four inclusive comprise the first figure. Of lines five to eight the second figure; of lines nine to twelve the third; of lines thirteen to sixteen, the fourth figure, as shown in the diagram on page 660.

The symbol of a pentagram either within or without a circumscribed circle should be made at the top of the paper on which the dashes are made. The paper itself should be perfectly clean and should have never been previously used for any other purpose. If a circle be used with the pentagram, it should be drawn before the latter is described. The pentagram should always be of the “invoking” type, as described in the pentagram ritual. Since the pentagram concerns the element of earth, it should therefore be drawn beginning at the top descending to the lower left hand point, carefully closing the angle at the finish. Within the centre of the pentagram, the sigil of the “ruler” to which the matter of the question specially refers, should be placed.

Note by Regardie: When attributing the above geomantic figures to the Tree of Life, the two Saturnian figures represent the Three Supernals. The planetary figures are placed on the appropriate Sephiroth, while Caput and Cauda Draconis signify Malkuth.

Element	Geomantic Figure	Name and Meaning of Figure
Fire		PUER (a boy, yellow, beardless.)
Earth		AMISSIO (loss, comprehended without.)
Air		ALBUS (white, fair.)
Water		POPULUS (people, congregation.)
Fire		FORTUNA MAJOR (greater fortune and aid; safeguard, entering.)
Earth		CONJUNCTIO (assembly, conjunction.)
Air		PUELLA (a girl, beautiful.)
Water		RUBEUS (red, reddish.)
Fire		ACQUISITIO (obtaining, comprehended within.)
Earth		CARCER (a prison; bound.)

Water		LAETITIA (joy, laughing, healthy, bearded.)
Fire		CAUDA DRACONIS (the lower threshold, going out.)
Earth		CAPUT DRACONIS (heart, upper threshold; entering.)
Air		FORTUNA MINOR (lesser fortune; and aid; safeguard going out.)
Water		VIA (way, journey.)

If the question be of the nature of Saturn, such as agriculture, sorrow, death, etc., the sigil of Zazel should be placed in the pentagram. If of Jupiter, concerning good fortune, feasting, church preferment, etc., the sigil of Hismael. If of Mars, war, fighting, victory, etc., the sigil of Bartzabel. If of the sun, power, magistracy, success, etc., the sigil of Sorath. If of Venus, love, music, pleasure, etc., the sigil of Kedemel. If of Mercury, such as science, learning, knavery, etc., the sigil of Taphthartharath. If of travelling, fishing, etc., under Luna, then the sigil of Chasmodai. In the diagram appended the sigil of Hismael is employed.

During the marking down of the points, the attention should be fixed upon the sigil within the pentagram, and the mind should carefully consider the question proposed.¹ The hand should not be moved from the paper until the sixteen lines of points are complete. A pencil is therefore preferable to a pen for this purpose—unless, of course, a very reliable fountain pen is employed. It is practically more convenient to draw or rule four lines across the paper beforehand to mark off the space for such four lines composing a geomantic figure as shown on page 658. The first four geomantic figures formed directly from the sixteen lines of points are called the Four Mothers. It is from them that the remaining figures necessary to complete the geomantic scheme of direction are derived.

These should now be placed in a row from right to left, for the greater convenience of the necessary calculations—though much practice may render this unnecessary. The first figure will be attributed to the south, the second to the east, the third to the north, and the fourth to the west.

The Four Mothers

4th West	3rd North	2nd East	1st South

o	o o	o o	o
o o	o	o	o o
o o	o	o o	o o

Rubeus	Fortuna Major	Amissio	Fortuna Minor
--------	---------------	---------	---------------

From these Four Mothers, four resulting figures called the Four Daughters are now to be derived, thus: The uppermost points of the First Mother will be the uppermost points of the First Daughter. The corresponding, that is the first line of, points of the Second Mother will be the second points of the First Daughter. The same line of points of the Third Mother will constitute the third points of the First Daughter. The same point of the Fourth Mother will be the fourth point of the First Daughter. The same rule applies to all the figures. The second line of points of the four Mother figures will comprise the Second Daughter. The third line of points of the Four Mothers will comprise the Third Daughter, and the fourth line of points of the Four Mothers will comprise the Fourth Daughter.

	Mothers
	4th	3rd	2nd	1st
First Daughter, 4 uppermost points	o o	o o	o	o
Second Daughter, 4 next points	o	o o	o o	o
Third Daughter, 4 next points	o o	o	o	o o
Fourth Daughter, 4 last points	o o	o	o o	o o

Rubeus	Fortuna Major	Amissio	Fortuna Minor
--------	---------------	---------	---------------

Applying the above rule throughout, the following will represent the Four Daughters:

o o	o o	o	o
o o	o	o o	o
o	o	o o	o o
o o	o o	o	o o
Albus	Conjunctio	Carcer	Fortuna Minor

These, again for the convenience of the beginner, are now to be placed on the left hand of the Four Mothers in a single line from right to left.

Four Daughters				Four Mothers
8th	7th	6th	5th	4th	3rd	2nd	1st
o o	o o	o	o	o o	o o	o	o
o o	o	o o	o	o	o o	o o	o

o o	o o	o	o o	o o	o	o o	o o
Albus	Conjunctio	Carcer	Fortuna Minor	Rubeus	Fortuna Major	Amissio	Fortuna Major

From these eight figures, four others are now to be calculated which may be called the Four Resultants, or the Four Nephews. These will be the ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth figures of the whole scheme. The ninth figure is formed from the points of the first and second figures compared together; the tenth from the third and fourth figures; the eleventh from the fifth and sixth figures, the twelfth from the seventh and eighth figures. The rule is to compare or add together the points of the corresponding lines. If, for instance, the first line of the First Mother consists of one point, and the first line of the Second Mother also consists of one point, these two are added together, and since they are an even number two points are marked down for the first line of the Resultant. If the added points are odd, only one point is marked for the resulting figure. The ninth figure is thus formed:

2nd Figure	1st Figure
o	o	Uppermost	points added equals 2:	o o
o o	o	Second	points added equals 3:	o
o	o o	Third	points added equals 3:	o
o o	o o	Lowest	points added equals 4:	o o
Conjunctio

The other Resultants are calculated in precisely the same way:

Four Daughters				Four Mothers
8th	7th	6th	5th	4th	3rd	2nd	1st
o o	o o	o	o	o o	o o	o	o
o o	o	o o	o	o	o o	o o	o
o	o	o o	o o	o o	o	o	o o
o o	o o	o	o o	o o	o	o o	o o
Albus	Conjunctio	Carcer	Fortuna Minor	Rubeus	Fortuna Major	Amissio	Fortuna Major

In this way are yielded the four Resultants:

12th	11th	10th	9th
o o	o o	o o	o o
o	o	o	o
o o	o o	o	o
o o	o	o	o o
Rubeus	Acquisitio	Caput Draconis	Conjunctio

And thus the twelve principal figures of the geomantic scheme of divination are completed. These again correspond to the twelve astrological houses of heaven, with which they will later on be compared.

Chapter Three

For the greater assistance of the diviner in forming a judgment upon the general condition of the scheme of twelve figures thus far obtained, it is usual to deduce from them three other subsidiary figures. These three are of less importance than the twelve previous figures, and are not to be considered at all in the light of component figures of the scheme, but only as aids to the general judgment. These other figures are known as the Right Witness, Left Witness, and the Judge.

The two witnesses are without significance in the divination, except as they are the roots from which the figure known as the Judge is derived. The Right Witness is formed from the ninth and tenth figures by comparing the points in the manner before shown in the formation of the Resultants. That is, the corresponding lines of points in the two figures are compared together, and the addition, whether odd or even, comprises the points of the Witness. The Left Witness represents the combination in a similar manner of the eleventh and twelfth figures. The Judge again is formed in precisely the same way from the Two Witnesses, and is therefore a synthesis of the whole figure. If he be good, the figure is good and the judgment will be favourable; and vice versa. From the nature of the formation of the fifteenth figure, the Judge, it should always consist of an even number of points, and never of odd. That is, in adding together the four lines of points comprising the Judge, the result should be an even number. For if the Judge were a figure of odd points, it would show that a mistake had been made somewhere in the calculations.

The Reconciler is a sixteenth figure sometimes used for aiding the judgment by combining the Judge with the figure in the particular house signifying the thing demanded. Thus, in the preceding scheme, the Judge formed is Populus, and the second figure being Amissio, their combination also yields Amissio.

In order to discover where $\oplus$ the Part of Fortune will fall, add together all the points of the first twelve figures. Divide that number by twelve and place the Part of Fortune with the figure answering to the remainder. If there is no remainder it will fall on the twelfth figure. The Part of Fortune is a symbol of ready money, money in cash belonging to the querent, and is of the greatest importance in all questions of money.

Chapter Four

The following is the signification of the twelve houses of heaven, in brief:

First house (Ascendant):	Life, health, querent, etc.
Second house:	Money, property, personal worth.
Third house:	Brothers, sisters, news, short journeys, etc.
Fourth house:	Father, landed property, inheritance. The grave, the end of the matter.
Fifth house:	Children, pleasure, feasts, speculation.

Sixth house:	Servants, sickness, uncles and aunts, small animals.
Seventh house:	Love, marriage, husband or wife. Partnerships and associations, public enemies, lawsuits.
Eighth house:	Deaths, wills, legacies; pain, anxiety. Estate of deceased.
Ninth house:	Long journeys, voyages. Science, religion, art, visions, and divinations.
Tenth house:	Mother. Rank and honour, trade or profession, authority, employment, and worldly position generally.
Eleventh house:	Friends, hopes, and wishes.
Twelfth house:	Sorrows, fears, punishments, enemies in secret, institutions, unseen dangers, restriction.

The twelve figures of the geomantic scheme as previously calculated are to be thus attributed to a map of the twelve houses of heaven, and are placed therein.

The first figure goes with the tenth house.

The second figure goes with the first house.

The third figure goes with the fourth house.

The fourth figure goes with the seventh house.

The fifth figure goes with the eleventh house.

The sixth figure goes with the second house.

The seventh figure goes with the fifth house.

The eighth figure goes with the eighth house.

The ninth figure goes with the twelfth house.

The tenth figure goes with the third house.

The eleventh figure goes with the sixth house.

The twelfth figure goes with the ninth house.

Thus the figures derived by the calculations provided in the example given previously would occupy a Geomantic map as follows:

Geomantic Reading

Chapter Five

Herein follows a set of general tables of the sixteen figures in the twelve houses for the better convenience of forming a general judgment of the scheme.² Under the head of each figure separately is given its general effect in whatever house of the map of the heavens it may be located.

Thus, by taking the house signifying the end or result of the matter, the fourth house, etc., and by noting what figures fall therein, the student may find by these tables the general effect in that position.

Acquisitio

Generally good for profit and gain.

Ascendant

Happy, success in all things.

Second house

Very prosperous.

Third house

Favour and riches.

Fourth house

Good fortune and success.

Fifth house

Good success.

Sixth house	Good—especially if it agree with the Fifth.
Seventh house	Reasonably good.
Eighth house	Rather good, but not very. The sick shall die.
Ninth house	Good in all demands.
Tenth house	Good in suits. Very prosperous.
Eleventh house	Good in all.
Twelfth house	Evil, pain, and loss.

Amissio

Good for loss of substance and sometimes for love; but very bad for gain.

Ascendant	Ill in all things but for prisoners.
Second house	Very ill for money, but good for love.
Third house	Ill end—except for quarrels.
Fourth house	Ill in all.
Fifth house	Evil, except for agriculture.
Sixth house	Rather evil for love.
Seventh house	Very good for love, otherwise evil.
Eighth house	Excellent in all questions.
Ninth house	Evil in all things.
Tenth house	Evil, except for favour with women.
Eleventh house	Good for love, otherwise bad.
Twelfth house	Evil in all things.

Fortuna Major

Good for gain in all things where a person has hopes to win.

Ascendant	Good, save in secrecy.
Second house	Good, except in sad things.
Third house	Good in all.
Fourth house	Good in all, but melancholy.
Fifth house	Very good in all things.
Sixth house	Very good except for debauchery.
Seventh house	Good in all.
Eighth house	Moderately good.

Ninth house	Very good.
Tenth house	Exceedingly good. Go to superiors.
Eleventh house	Very good.
Twelfth house	Good in all.
Fortuna Minor
Good in any matter in which a person wishes to proceed quickly.
Ascendant	Speed in victory and in love, but choleric.
Second house	Very good.
Third house	Good—but wrathful.
Fourth house	Haste; rather evil except for peace.
Fifth house	Good in all things.
Sixth house	Medium in all.
Seventh house	Evil, except for war or love.
Eighth house	Evil generally.
Ninth house	Good, but choleric.
Tenth house	Good, except for peace.
Eleventh house	Good, especially for love.
Twelfth house	Good, except for alteration, or for suing another.
Laetitia
Good for joy, present or to come.
Ascendant	Good, except in war.
Second house	Sickly.
Third house	Ill.
Fourth house	Mainly good.
Fifth house	Excellently good.
Sixth house	Evil generally.
Seventh house	Indifferent.
Eighth house	Evil generally.
Ninth house	Very good.
Tenth house	Good, rather in war than in peace.
Eleventh house	Good in all.

Twelfth house	Evil generally.
Tristitia
Evil in almost all things.
Ascendant	Medium, but good for treasure and fortifying.
Second house	Medium, but good to fortify.
Third house	Evil in all.
Fourth house	Evil in all.
Fifth house	Very evil.
Sixth house	Evil, except for debauchery.
Seventh house	Evil for inheritance and magic only.
Eighth house	Evil, but in secrecy good.
Ninth house	Evil, except for magic.
Tenth house	Evil, except for fortifications.
Eleventh house	Evil in all.
Twelfth house	Evil, but good for magic and treasure.

Puella

Good in all demands, especially in those relating to women.

Ascendant	Good except in war.
Second house	Very good.
Third house	Good.
Fourth house	Indifferent.
Fifth house	Very good, but notice the aspects.
Sixth house	Good, but especially so for debauchery.
Seventh house	Good, except for war.
Eighth house	Good.
Ninth house	Good for music. Otherwise only medium.
Tenth house	Good for peace.
Eleventh house	Good, and love of ladies.
Twelfth house	Good in all.

Puer

Evil in most demands, except in those relating to war or love.

Ascendant	Indifferent. Best in war.
Second house	Good, but with trouble.
Third house	Good fortune.

Eighth house	Evil.

Ninth house	Look for letters.
Tenth house	Good.
Eleventh house	Good in all.
Twelfth house	Very evil.

Chapter Six

By essential dignity is meant the strength of a figure when found in a particular house. A figure is, therefore, strongest when in what is called its house, very strong when in its exaltation, strong in its triplicity, very weak in its fall, weakest of all in its detriment. A figure is in its fall when in a house opposite to that of its exaltation, and in its detriment when opposite to its own house.

The geomantic figures, being attributed to the planets and signs, are dignified according to the rules which obtain in astrology. That is to say, they follow the dignities of their ruling planets, considering the twelve houses of the scheme as answering to the twelve signs. Thus, the ascendant or first house answers to Aries, the second house to Taurus, the third house to Gemini, and so on to the twelfth answering to Pisces. Therefore the figures of Mars will be strong in the first house, but weak in the seventh house, and so forth.

Name of Sign	Ruler	Element	Exaltation	Fall	Detriment	Strong
Aries	Mars	Fire	Sun	Saturn	Venus	Jupiter
Taurus	Venus	Earth	Luna	—	Mars	Jupiter
Gemini	Mercury	Air	—	—	Jupiter	Saturn
Cancer	Luna	Water	Jupiter	Mars	Saturn	Mercury
Leo	Sol	Fire	—	—	Saturn	Mars
Virgo	Mercury	Earth	Mercury	Venus	Jupiter	Saturn
Libra	Venus	Air	Saturn	Sol	Mars	Jupiter
Scorpio	Mars	Water	—	Luna	Venus	Sun
Sagittarius	Jupiter	Fire	—	—	Mercury	Venus

Capricorn	Saturn	Earth	Mars	Jupiter	Luna	Mercury
Aquarius	Saturn	Air	—	—	Sol	—
Pisces	Jupiter	Water	Venus	Mercury	Mercury	—
Caput Draconis is strong in the dignities of Jupiter and Venus. Cauda Draconis is strong in the dignities of Saturn and Mars.

Chapter Seven

Remember always that if the figures Rubeus or Cauda Draconis fall in the ascendant, or first house, the figure is not fit for judgment and should be destroyed without consideration. Another figure for the question should not be erected before at least two hours have elapsed.

Your figure being thoroughly arranged as on a map of the heavens, as previously shown, note first to what house the demand belongs. Then look for the Witnesses and the Judge, as to whether the latter is favourable or otherwise, and in what particular way. Put this down.

Note next what figure falls in the house required. Also whether it passes or springs—that is whether it is also present in any other house or houses. These should also be considered—as for example in a question of money stolen, if the figure in the second house be also found in the sixth house, it might also show that the thief was a servant in the house.

Then look in the table of figures in the houses and see what the figure signifies in the special house under consideration. Put this down also. Then look in the table for the strength of the figures in that house. Following this, apply the astrological rule of aspects between houses, noting what houses are sextile, quintile, square, trine, etc. Write the good on one side and the evil on the other, noting also whether these figures also are strong or weak, friendly or unfriendly in nature to the figure in the house required. Note that in looking up the aspects between houses, there are two directions, dexter and sinister. The dexter aspect is that which is contrary to the natural succession of the houses; the sinister is the reverse. The dexter aspect is more powerful than the sinister.

Then add the meaning of the figure in the fourth house, which will signify the end of the matter. It may also assist you to form a Reconciler figure from the figure in the house required and the Judge, noting what figure results and whether it harmonizes with either or both by nature. Now consider all you have written down, and according to the balance of good and evil therein form your final judgment.

Consider also in money matters where the Part of Fortune falls.

For example, let us consider the figure previously set up and form a judgment for “loss of money in business” therefrom.

Populus is the Judge, and we find that in questions of money, which concern the second house, it signifies “medium good.” The question as a whole is of the nature of the second house, where we find Carcer. We then discover that Carcer here is “evil,” as showing obstacles and delays. The Part of Fortune is in the ascendant with Amissio, signifying loss through querent’s own mistake and loss through querent’s self.

The figure of Amissio springs into no other house, therefore this does not affect the question. Carcer in the second house is neither strong nor weak; its strength for evil is medium. The figures sextile and trine of the second are Conjunctio, Fortuna Major, Fortuna Minor, and Acquisitio, all good figures, helping the matter and friendly in nature. This signifies well-intentioned help of friends. The figures square and opposition of the second are Fortuna Minor, Conjunctio, Albus, which are not hostile to Carcer, therefore showing “opposition not great.”

The figure in the fourth house is Fortuna Major which shows a good end but with anxiety. Let us now form a Reconciler between the figure of the second house which is Carcer and the Judge, Populus, which produces Carcer again, a sympathetic figure, but denoting delay—delay, but helping the querent’s wishes. Now let us add all these together:

1. Medium.
2. Evil and obstacles, delay.

3. Loss through querent's self.
4. Strength for evil, medium only.
5. Well-intentioned aid of friends.
6. Not much opposition from enemies.
7. Ending—good; but with anxiety.
8. Delay, but helping querent's wishes.

And we can formulate the final judgment:

That the querent's loss in business has been principally owing to his own mismanagement. That he will have a long and hard struggle, but he will meet with help from friends. That his obstacles will gradually give way, and that after much anxiety he will eventually recoup himself for his former losses.

Summary of Stages in Geomantic Divination

1. If Rubeus or Cauda Draconis in ascendant destroy the figure.
2. Note the house to which the question belongs. See if the figure there springs into another house.
3. Form the Judge from the two Witnesses.
4. Part of Fortune—that is, if money question.
5. See if figure in house concerned is strong or weak. If it pass or spring into any other house.
6. See figures sextile and trine, square and opposition.
7. Friendly or unfriendly.
8. Note the figure in fourth house, signifying the end or outcome.
9. Form a Reconciler from Judge and the figure in house to which the demand appertains.

Note by Israel Regardie

Although this whole instruction of geomancy describes the process as being performed throughout on paper with a pencil, yet it should be remembered that this description is but a makeshift for the convenience of the unenterprising student. By definition, geomancy is a scheme of divination by and through the element of earth. Therefore the student with initiative, to whom this method appeals, should act accordingly. Let him therefore prepare a quantity of clean and dry black earth—or desert sand, if possible, but not that taken from the seashore—and also a tray or wooden box which is to be reserved solely for the purpose of housing this consecrated earth. The outside of the box might be decorated with sigils or symbolic paintings in harmony with the general idea, and painted in the four Malkuth colours. A small, slender wand, pointed to make clean sharp holes or markings, should be prepared since it will be with this instrument that the sixteen lines of dots or holes in the earth will be made. When all has been duly prepared, the box of earth should be given a ceremonial consecration; the student who has studied the general formulae of consecration will know exactly what should be done.

In actual divinatory practice, the invoking earth pentagram enclosing the sigil, and the sixteen rows of dots from which the Four Mothers will be formed, can be quickly marked on the earth with this special wand or pointer. Then, for convenience's sake, the student can transfer these four primary figures to paper, calculate the remaining eight figures to be placed on the map, and proceed to judgment exactly as this instruction lays down. Experience shows that the actual use of earth as a means of forming the fundamental magical link between the initiated diviner and the geomantic divinatory genii is psychologically more valid and effectual than with paper and pencil, besides yielding far more satisfactory results.

1. Note by Regardie: A common practice is to repeat audibly the name of the ruler as though to invoke him, followed by a short sentence concerning the matter of divination.
 2. Note by Regardie: I here omit a series of interpretations based upon the use of the two Witnesses and the Judge. I have found these most untrustworthy, giving answers in utter contradiction to the proper divination worked out by the readings which follow. The medieval origin of the present omission is clearly shown, and is not a credit to the system. The following facts, which should be very carefully studied, will provide the fundamental authoritative data to enable the student to divine correctly.

The Descriptions of the 78 Tarot Symbols
Together with Their Meanings
Of the Aces

First in order and appearance are the four Aces, representing the force of the spirit acting in, and binding together, the four scales of each element and answering to the dominion of the letters of the Name in the Kether of each. They represent the radical or root-force. The four Aces are said to be placed on the north pole of the universe, wherein they revolve, governing its revolution, and ruling as the connecting link between Yetsirah and the material plane of the universe.

I. The Root of the Powers of Fire: Ace of Wands

A white radiating angelic hand issuing from clouds and grasping a heavy club which has three branches in the colours and with the sigils of the scales. The right- and left-hand branches end respectively in three flames and the centre one in four flames, thus yielding ten, the number of the Sephiroth. Two and twenty leaping flames or Yods surround it, answering to the paths of these. Three fall below the right branch for Aleph, Mem, and Shin. Seven above the central branch for the double letters. And between it and that on the right, twelve—six above and six below—about the left-hand branch. The whole is a great and flaming torch. It symbolizes force, strength, rush, vigour, energy, and it governs according to its nature various works and questions. It implies natural as opposed to invoked force.

II. The Root of the Powers of the Waters: Ace of Cups or Chalices

A radiant white angelic hand issuing from clouds and supporting on the palm thereof a cup, resembling that of the Stolistes. From it rises a fountain of clear and glistening water; and spray falling on all sides into clear calm water below, in which grow lotuses and water lilies. The great letter Heh of the supernal mother is traced in the spray of the fountain. It symbolizes fertility, productiveness, beauty, pleasure, happiness, etc.

III. The Root of the Powers of Air: Ace of Swords

A white radiating angelic hand, issuing from clouds, and grasping the hilt of a sword, which supports a white radiant celestial crown from which depend, on the right, the olive branch of peace, and on the left, the palm branch of suffering. Six Vaus fall from its point.

It symbolizes invoked as contrasted with natural force; for it is the invocation of the sword. Raised upward, it invokes the divine crown of spiritual brightness. But reversed it is the invocation of demoniac force, and becomes a fearfully evil symbol. It represents, therefore, very great power for good or evil, but invoked. And it also represents whirling force and strength through trouble. It is the affirmation of justice, upholding divine authority; and it may become the sword of wrath, punishment, and affliction.

IV. The Root of the Powers of Earth: Ace of Pentacles

A white radiant angelic hand, holding a branch of a rose tree, whereon is a large pentacle formed of five concentric circles. The innermost circle is white, charged with a red Greek cross. From this white centre twelve rays, also white, issue. These terminate at the circumference, making the whole something like an astrological figure of the heavens.

It is surmounted by a small circle, above which is a large Maltese Cross, and with two white wings; four roses and two buds are shewn. The hand issueth from the clouds as in the other three cases. It representeth materiality in all senses, good and evil, and is therefore in a sense illusionary. It shows material gain, labour, power, wealth, etc.

The Sixteen Court or Royal Cards

The Four Kings

The four kings or figures mounted on steeds represent the Yod forces of the name in each suit, the radix, father, and commencement of material forces. A force in which all the others are implied and of which they form the development and completion. A force swift and violent in action, but whose effect soon passes away, and therefore symbolized by a figure on a steed riding swiftly, and clothed in complete armour.

Therefore is the knowledge of the scale of the king so necessary for the commencement of all magical working.

The Four Queens

Are seated upon thrones, representing the forces of Heh of the name in each suit, the mother, and bringer forth of material force, a force which develops, and realizes the force of the king. A force steady and unshaken, but not rapid, though enduring. It is therefore symbolized by a figure seated upon a throne but also clothed in armour.

The Four Princes

These princes are figures seated in chariots, and thus borne forward. They represent the Vau forces of the name in each suit; the mighty son of the king and the queen, who realizes the influence of both scales of force. A prince, the son of a king and queen, yet a prince of princes, and a king of kings. An emperor, whose effect is at once rapid (though not so swift as that of a king) and enduring (though not as steadfast as that of a queen). It is therefore symbolized by a figure borne in a chariot, and clothed with armour. Yet is his power illusionary, unless set in motion by his father and mother.

The Four Princesses

Are the knaves of the tarot pack. The four princesses or figures of amazons standing firmly by themselves, neither riding upon horses, nor seated upon thrones, nor borne on chariots. They represent the forces of Heh final of the name in each suit, completing the influences of the other scales. The mighty and potent daughter of a king and queen: a princess powerful and terrible. A queen of queens, an empress, whose effect combines those of the king, queen, and prince. At once violent and permanent, she is therefore symbolized by a figure standing firmly by itself, only partially draped and having but little armour. Yet her power existeth not save by reason of the others, and then indeed it is mighty and terrible materially, and is the throne of the forces of the spirit. Woe unto whomsoever shall make war upon her when thus established!

The Sphere of Influence of the Court Cards of the Tarot Pack

The princesses rule over the four parts of the celestial heavens which lie around the north pole, and above the respective Kerubic signs of the zodiac, and they form the thrones of the powers of the four aces.

The twelve cards—four kings, four queens, and four princes—rule the dominions of the celestial heavens between the realm of the four princesses and the zodiac, as is hereafter shewn. And they, as it were, link together the signs.

WANDS

V. The Lord of the Flame and the Lightning, King of the Spirits of Fire: Knight of Wands

A winged warrior riding upon a black horse with flaming mane and tail. The horse itself is not winged. The rider wears a winged helmet (like an old Scandinavian and Gaulish helmet) with a royal crown. A corselet of scale mail and buskins of the same, and a flowing scarlet mantle. Above his helmet, upon his cuirass, and on his shoulder pieces and buskins he bears, as a crest, a winged black horse's head. He grasps a club with flaming ends, somewhat similar to that in the symbol of the Ace of Wands, but not so heavy, and also the sigil of his scale is shewn. Beneath the rushing feet of his steed are waving flames of fire.

He is active, generous, fierce, sudden, and impetuous. If ill-dignified he is evil-minded, cruel, bigoted, brutal. He rules the celestial heavens from above the twentieth degree of Scorpio to the first two decans of Sagittarius and this includes a part of the constellation Hercules (who also carries a club).

Fire of fire. King of the Salamanders.

VI. Queen of the Thrones of Flame: Queen of Wands

A crowned queen with long red-golden hair, seated upon a throne, with steady flames beneath. She wears a corselet and buskins of scale mail, which latter her robe discloses. Her arms are almost bare. On cuirass and buskins are leopards' heads winged. The same symbol surmounteth her crown. At her side is a couchant leopard on which her hands rest. She bears a long wand with a very heavy conical head. The face is beautiful and resolute.

Adaptability, steady force applied to an object. Steady rule; great attractive power, power of command, yet liked notwithstanding. Kind and generous when not opposed. If ill-dignified: obstinate, revengeful, domineering, tyrannical and apt to turn suddenly against another without a cause. She rules the heavens from above the last decan of Pisces to above the twentieth degree of Aries, including a part of Andromeda.

Water of fire. Queen of the Salamanders or Salamandrines.

VII. The Prince of the Chariot of Fire: King of Wands

A kingly figure with a golden winged crown, seated on a chariot. He has large white wings. One wheel of his chariot is shewn. He wears corselet and buskin of scale armour, decorated with winged lions' heads, which symbol also surmounts his crown. His chariot is drawn by a lion. His arms are bare, save for the shoulder pieces of the corselet, and he bears a torch or fire wand, somewhat similar to that of the Zelator Adeptus Minor. Beneath the chariot are flames, some waved, some salient.

Swift, strong, hasty, rather violent, yet just and generous, noble and scorning meanness. If ill-dignified: cruel intolerant, prejudiced, and ill-natured. He rules the heavens from above the last decan of Cancer to the second decan of Leo. Hence he includes most of Leo Minor.

Air of fire. Prince and Emperor of Salamanders.

VIII. Princess of the Shining Flame, the Rose of the Palace of Fire: Knave of Wands

A very strong and beautiful woman, with flowing red-golden hair, attired like an amazon. Her shoulders, arms, bosom, and knees are bare. She wears a short kilt, reaching to the knees. Round her waist is a broad belt of scale mail, narrow at the side, broad in the front and back, and having a winged tiger's head in front. She wears a Corinthian shaped helmet, and crown, with a long plume. It also is surmounted by a tiger's head, and the same symbol forms the buckle of her scale-mail buskins.

A mantle lined with tiger's skin falls back from her shoulders. Her right hand rests on a small golden or brazen altar, ornamented with rams' heads, and with flames of fire leaping from it. Her left hand leans on a long and heavy club, swelling at the lower end, where the sigil is placed. It has flames of fire leaping from it the whole way down, but the flames are ascending. This club or torch is much longer than that carried by the king or queen. Beneath her firmly placed feet are leaping flames of fire.

Brilliance, courage, beauty, force, sudden in anger or love, desire of power, enthusiasm, revenge. Ill-dignified: superficial, theatrical, cruel, unstable, domineering. She rules the heavens over one quadrant of the portion round the North Pole.

Earth of fire. Princess and Empress of the Salamanders. Throne of the Ace of Wands.

CUPS

IX. Lord of the Waves and the Waters, King of the Hosts of the Sea:

Knight of Cups

A beautiful youthful winged warrior, with flying hair, riding upon a white horse, which latter is not winged. His general equipment is similar to that of the Knight of Wands, but upon his helmet, cuirass, and buskins is a peacock with opened wings. He holds a cup in his hand, bearing the sigil of the scale. Beneath his horse's feet is the sea. From the cup issues a crab.

Graceful, poetic, Venusian, indolent, but enthusiastic if roused. Ill-dignified, he is sensual, idle, and untruthful. He rules the heavens from above twentieth degree of Aquarius to twentieth degree of Pisces including the greater part of Pegasus.

Fire of water. King of Undines and of Nymphs.

X. Queen of the Thrones of the Waters: Queen of Cups

A very beautiful fair woman like a crowned queen, seated upon a throne, beneath which is flowing water, wherein lotuses are seen. Her general dress is similar to that of the Queen of Wands, but upon her crown, cuirass, and buskins is seen an ibis with opened wings, and beside her is the same bird, whereon her hand rests. She holds a cup, wherefrom a crayfish issues. Her face is dreamy. She holds a lotus in the hand upon the ibis.

She is imaginative, poetic, kind, yet not willing to take much trouble for another. Coquettish, good-natured, underneath a dreamy appearance. Imagination stronger than feeling. Very much affected by other influences, and therefore more dependent upon good or ill-dignity than upon most other symbols. She rules from twentieth degree of Gemini to twentieth degree of Cancer.

Water of water. Queen of Nymphs and Undines.

XI. Prince of the Chariot of the Waters: King of Cups

A winged kingly figure with a winged crown, seated in a chariot drawn by an eagle. On the wheel is the symbol of a scorpion. The eagle is borne as a crest upon his crown, cuirass, and buskins. General attire like King of Wands. Beneath his chariot is the calm and stagnant water of a lake. His scale armour resembles feathers more than scales. He holds in one hand a lotus and the other a cup, charged with the sigil of his scale. A serpent issues from the cup, and has its head tending down to the waters of the lake.

He is subtle, violent, crafty, and artistic. A fierce nature with calm exterior. Powerful for good or evil, but more attracted by the evil, if allied with apparent power or wisdom. If ill-dignified, he is intensely evil and merciless. He rules from twentieth degree of Libra to twentieth degree of Scorpio.

Air of water. Prince and Emperor of Nymphs and Undines.

XII. Princess of the Waters and Lotus of the Palace of the Floods: Knave of Cups

A beautiful amazon-like figure, softer in nature than the Princess of Wands. Her attire is similar. She stands on a sea with foaming spray. Away to her right is a dolphin. She wears as a crest on her helmet, belt, and buskins, a swan with opening wings. She bears in one hand a lotus and in the other an open cup from which a turtle issues. Her mantle is lined with swansdown and is of thin floating material.

Sweetness, poetry, gentleness, and kindness. Imagination, dreamy, at times indolent, yet courageous if roused. Ill-dignified, she is selfish and luxurious. She rules a quadrant of the heavens around Kether.

Earth of water. Princess and Empress of Nymphs and Undines. Throne of the Ace of Cups.

SWORDS

XIII. Lord of the Winds and Breezes, King of the Spirit of Air: Knight of Swords

A winged warrior with crowned and winged helmet, mounted upon a brown steed, his general equipment is as that of the Knight of Wands, but he wears as a crest a winged six-pointed star, similar to those represented on the heads of Castor and Pollux, the Dioscuri, the Twins—Gemini (a part of which constellation is included in his rule). He holds a drawn sword with the sigil of his scale upon its pommel. Beneath his horse's feet are dark, driving stratus clouds.

He is active, clever, subtle, fierce, delicate, courageous, skillful, but inclined to domineer. Also to overvalue small things, unless well-dignified.

Ill-dignified: deceitful, tyrannical, and crafty. Rules from twentieth degree of Taurus to twentieth degree of Gemini.

Fire of air. King of Sylphs and Sylphides.

XIV. Queen of the Thrones of Air: Queen of Swords

A graceful woman with curly waving hair, like a queen seated upon a throne, and crowned. Beneath the throne are grey cumulus clouds. Her general attire is similar to that of the Queen of Wands. But she wears as a crest a winged child's head (like the head of an infantile kerub, seen sculptured on tombs). A drawn sword in one hand, and in the other a large bearded newly severed head of a man.

Intensely perceptive, keen observation, subtle, quick, confident, often perseveringly accurate in superficial things, graceful, fond of dancing and balancing. Ill-dignified: cruel, sly, deceitful, unreliable, though with a good exterior. Rules from twentieth degree of Virgo to twentieth degree of Libra.

Water of air. Queen of the Sylphs and Sylphides.

XV. Prince of the Chariots of the Winds: King of Swords

A winged king with a winged crown, seated in a chariot drawn by arch fays, archons, or arch fairies, represented as winged youths very slightly draped, with butterfly wings, heads encircled with a fillet with pentagrams thereon, and holding wands surmounted by pentagram-shaped stars. The same butterfly wings are on their feet and fillet. General equipment is that of the King of Wands, but he bears as a crest a winged angelic head with a pentagram on the brow. Beneath the chariot are grey rain clouds or nimbi. His hair long and waving in serpentine whirls, and whorl figures compose the scales of his armour. A drawn sword in one hand, a sickle in the other. With the sword he rules, with the sickle he slays.

Full of ideas and thoughts and designs, distrustful, suspicious, firm in friendship and enmity, careful, slow, over-cautious. Symbolizes Alpha and Omega, the giver of death, who slays as fast as he creates. Ill-dignified:

harsh, malicious, plotting, obstinate, yet hesitating and unreliable. Ruler from twentieth degree of Capricorn to twentieth degree of Aquarius.

Air of air. Prince and Emperor of Sylphs and Sylphides.

XVI. Princess of the Rushing Winds, Lotus of the Palace of Air: Knave of Swords

An amazon figure with waving hair, slighter than the Rose of the Palace of Fire (Knave of Wands). Her attire is similar. The feet seem springy, giving the idea of swiftness. Weight changing from one foot to another and body swinging round. She resembles a mixture of Minerva and Diana; her mantle resembles the Aegis of Minerva. She wears as a crest the head of Medusa with serpent hair. She holds a sword in one hand and the other rests upon a small silver altar with grey smoke (no fire) ascending from it. Beneath her feet are white cirrus clouds.

Wisdom, strength, acuteness, subtleness in material things, grace, and dexterity. If ill-dignified, she is frivolous and cunning. She rules a quadrant of the heavens around Kether.

Earth of air. Princess and Empress of the Sylphs and Sylphides. Throne of the Ace of Swords.

PENTACLES

XVII. Lord of the Wide and Fertile Land, King of the Spirits of Earth:

Knight of Pentacles

A dark winged warrior with winged and crowned helmet, mounted on a light brown horse. Equipment as of the Knight of Wands. The winged head of a stag or antelope as a crest. Beneath the horse's feet is fertile land with ripened corn. In one hand he bears a sceptre surmounted with a hexagram, in the other a pentacle like a Zelator Adeptus Minor's.

Unless very well dignified, he is heavy, dull, and material. Laborious, clever, and patient in material matters. If ill-dignified he is avaricious, grasping, dull, jealous, not very courageous, unless assisted by other symbols. Rules from above twentieth degree of Leo to twentieth degree of Virgo.

Fire of earth. King of the Gnomes.

XVIII. Queen of the Thrones of Earth: Queen of Pentacles

A woman of beautiful face with dark hair, seated upon a throne, beneath which is dark, sandy earth. One side of her face is dark, the other light, and her symbolism is best represented in profile. Her attire is similar to that of the Queen of Wands. But she bears a winged goat's head as a crest. A goat is by her side. In one hand she bears a sceptre surmounted by a cube and in the other an orb of gold.

She is impetuous, kind, timid, rather charming, great-hearted, intelligent, melancholy, truthful, yet of many moods. Ill-dignified, she is undecided, capricious, foolish, changeable. Rules from twentieth degree of Sagittarius to twentieth degree of Capricorn.

Water of earth. Queen of Gnomes.

XIX. Prince of the Chariot of Earth: King of Pentacles

A winged kingly figure seated in a chariot drawn by a bull. He bears as a crest the symbol of the head of a winged bull. Beneath the chariot is land with many flowers. In one hand he bears an orb of gold held downwards, and in the other a sceptre surmounted by an orb and cross.

Increase of matter, increase of good and evil; solidifies, practically applies things, steady, reliable. If ill-dignified: animal, material, stupid. In either slow to anger, but furious if roused. Rules from twentieth degree of Aries to twentieth degree of Taurus.

Air of earth, Prince and Emperor of the Gnomes.

XX. Princess of the Echoing Hills, Rose of the Palace of Earth: Knave of Pentacles

A strong and beautiful amazon figure with red-brown hair, standing on grass and flowers. A grove of trees near her. Her form suggests Hera, Ceres, and Proserpine. She bears a winged ram's head as a crest, and wears a mantle of sheep's skin. In one hand she carries a sceptre with a circular disc, in the other a pentacle similar to that of the Ace of Pentacles.

She is generous, kind, diligent, benevolent, careful, courageous, preserving, pitiful. If ill-dignified, she is wasteful and prodigal. Rules over one quadrant of the heavens around the North Pole of the ecliptic.

Earth of earth. Princess and Empress of the Gnomes. Throne of the Ace of Pentacles.

The Thirty-Six Decans

Here follow the descriptions of the smaller cards of the four suits, thirty-six in number, answering unto the thirty-six decans of the zodiac.

There being thirty-six decanates and only seven planets, it follows that one of the latter must rule over one more decanate than the others. This is the planet Mars which is allotted the last decan of Pisces and first of Aries, because the long cold of the winter requires a great energy to overcome it and initiate spring.

The beginning of the decanates is from the royal king star of the heart of the lion, the great star Cor Leonis, and therefore is the first decanate that of Saturn in Leo.

Here follow the general meanings of the small cards of the suits, as classified under the nine Sephiroth below Kether.

Chokmah:

The four deuces symbolize the powers of the king and queen, first uniting and initiating the force, but before the prince and princess are thoroughly brought into action. Therefore do they generally imply the initiation and fecundation of a thing.

Binah:

The four threes, generally, represent the realization of action owing to the prince being produced. The central symbol on each card. Action definitely commenced for good or evil.

Chesed:

The four fours. Perfection, realization, completion, making a matter settled and fixed.

Geburah:

The four fives. Opposition, strife and struggle; war, obstacle to the thing in hand. Ultimate success or failure is otherwise shown.

Tiphareth:

The four sixes. Definite accomplishment and carrying out of a matter.

Netzach:

The four sevens. Generally shows a force, transcending the material plane, and is like unto a crown which is indeed powerful but requireth one capable of wearing it. The sevens then show a possible result which is dependent on the action then taken. They depend much on the symbols that accompany them.

Hod:

The four eights. Generally show solitary success; i.e., success in the matter for the time being, but not leading to much result apart from the thing itself.

Yesod:

The four nines. Generally they show very great fundamental force. Executive power, because they rest on a firm basis, powerful for good or evil.

Malkuth:

The four tens. Generally show fixed culminated completed force, whether good or evil. The matter thoroughly and definitely determined. Similar to the force of the nines, but ultimating it and carrying it out.

These are the meanings in the most general sense. Here follow the more particular descriptions and meanings. Decan cards are always modified by the other symbols with which they are in contact.

Saturn in Leo, 1°–10°. XXI. The Lord of Strife: 5 of Wands

Two white radiant angelic hands issuing from clouds right and left of the centre of the card. They are clasped together as in the grip of the First Order, and they hold at the same time by their centres five wands, or torches, which are similar to the wand of a Zelator Adeptus Minor. Four wands cross each other, but the fifth is upright in the centre. Flames leap from the point of junction. Above the central wand is the symbol Saturn and below it that of Leo representing the decanate.

Violent strife and contest, boldness, rashness, cruelty, violence, lust and desire, prodigality and generosity, depending on whether well- or ill-dignified.

Geburah of Yod. (Quarrelling and fighting.) This decan hath its beginning from the royal star of Leo, and unto it are allotted the two great angels of the Schemhamephoresch, Vahaviah and Yelayel.⁴

Jupiter in Leo, 10°–20°. XXII. Lord of Victory:

6 of Wands

Two hands in grip, as in the last, holding six wands crossed, three and three, flames issuing from the point of junction. Above and below are two short wands with flames issuing from a cloud at the lower part of the card, surmounted respectively by the symbols of Jupiter and Leo, representing the decanate.

Victory after strife, success through energy and industry, love, pleasure gained by labour, carefulness, sociability and avoiding of strife, yet victory therein. Also insolence, pride of riches and success, etc. The whole depending on dignity.

Tiphareth of Yod. (Gain.) Hereunto are allotted the great angels from the Schemhamephoresch, Saitel and Olmiah.

Mars in Leo, 20°–30°. XXIII. Lord of Valour:

7 of Wands

Two hands holding by grip, as before, six wands, three crossed by three, a third hand issuing from a cloud at the lower part of the card holding an upright wand, which passes between the others. Flames leap from the point of junction. Above and below the central wand are the symbols Mars and Leo, representing the decan.

Possible victory, depending upon the energy and courage exercised; valour, opposition, obstacles, difficulties, yet courage to meet them, quarrelling, ignorance, pretence, wrangling and threatening, also victory in small and unimportant things, and influence over subordinate. Depending on dignity as usual.

Netzach of Yod. (Opposition yet courage.) Herein rule the two great angels Mahashiah and Lelahel.

Sun in Virgo, 1°–10°. XXIV. Lord of Prudence:

8 of Pentacles

A white radiating angelic hand issuing from a cloud and grasping a branch of a rose tree, with four white roses thereon which touch only the four lowermost pentacles. No rosebuds seen, but only leaves touch the four uppermost disks. All the pentacles are similar to that of the Ace, but without the Maltese Cross and wings. These are arranged as the figure Populus:

*	*
*	*
*	*
*	*

Above and below them are the symbols Sol and Virgo for the decan.

Over-careful in small things at the expense of the great. “Penny-wise and pound-foolish.” Gain of ready money in small sums. Mean, avariciousness. Industrious, cultivation of land, hoarding, lacking in enterprise.

Hod of Heh. (Skill, prudence, cunning.) There rule those mighty angels Akaiah and Kehethel.

Venus in Virgo, 10°–20°. XXV. Lord of Material Gain: 9 of Pentacles

A white radiating angelic hand as before holding a rose branch with nine white roses, each of which touches a pentacle arranged thus:

*	*
*	*
	*
*	*
*	*

and there are more buds arranged on the branches as well as flowers. Venus and Virgo above and below.

Complete realization of material gain, inheritance, covetousness, treasuring of goods and sometimes theft, and knavery. All according to dignity.

Yesod of Heh. (Inheritance, much increase of goods.) Herein rule the mighty angels Hazayel and Aldiah.

Mercury in Virgo, 20°–30°. XXVI. Lord of Wealth: 10 of Pentacles

An angelic hand holding a branch by the lower extremity, whose roses touch all the pentacles. No buds however are shown. The symbols of Mercury and Virgo are above and below Pentacles thus:

Completion of material gain and fortune, but nothing beyond. As it were, at the very pinnacle of success. Old age, slothfulness, great wealth, yet sometimes loss in part, and later heaviness, dullness of mind, yet clever and prosperous in money transactions.

Malkuth of Heh. (Riches and wealth.) Herein rule the angels Hihaayah and Laviah.

Moon in Libra, 1°–10°. XXVII. Lord of Peace Restored: 2 of Swords

Two crossed swords, like the air dagger of Zelator Adeptus Minor, each held by a white radiating angelic hand. Upon the point where the two cross is a rose of five petals, emitting white rays, and top and bottom of card are two small daggers, supporting respectively the symbols of Luna (in horizontal position) and Libra, representing the decan.

Contradictory characteristics in the same nature. Strength through suffering. Pleasure after pain. Sacrifice and trouble, yet strength arising therefrom, symbolized by the position of the rose, as though the pain itself had brought forth the beauty. Peace restored, truce, arrangement of differences, justice. Truth and untruth. Sorrow and sympathy for those in trouble, aid to the weak and oppressed, unselfishness. Also an inclination to repetition of affronts if once pardoned, of asking questions of little moment, want of tact, often doing injury when meaning well. Talkative.

Chokmah of Vav. (Quarrels made up, but still some tension in relationships. Actions sometimes selfish and sometimes unselfish.) Herein rule the great angels Yezalel and Mebahel.

Saturn in Libra, 10°–20°. XXVIII. Lord of Sorrow: 3 of Swords

Three white radiating angelic hands issuing from clouds and holding three swords upright (as if the central sword had struck apart from the two others which were crossed in the preceding symbol). The central sword cuts asunder the rose of five petals (which in the preceding symbol grew at the junction of the swords); its petals are falling, and no white rays issue from it. Above and below the central sword are the symbols of Saturn and Libra, referring to the decanate.

Disruption, interruption, separation, quarrelling, sowing of discord and strife, mischief-making, sorrow, tears, yet mirth in evil pleasures, singing, faithfulness in promises, honesty in money transactions, selfish and dissipated, yet sometimes generous, deceitful in words and repetition. The whole according to dignity.

Binah of Vau. (Unhappiness, sorrow, tears.) Therein rule the angels Harayel and Hoqmiah.

Jupiter in Libra, 20°–30°. XXIX. The Lord of Rest from Strife: 4 of Swords

The white angelic radiating hands, each holding two swords, which four cross in the centre. The rose of five petals with white radiations is reinstated on the point of intersection. Above and below, on the points of two small daggers, are the symbols of Jupiter and Libra representing the decan.

Rest from sorrow, yet after and through it. Peace from and after war. Relaxation of anxiety. Quietness, rest, ease, and plenty, yet after struggle. Goods of this life, abundance. Modified by the dignity as in the other cases.

Chesed of Vav. (Convalescence, recovery from sickness, change for the better.) Herein rule Laviah and Kelial.

Mars in Scorpio, 1°–10°. XXX Lord of Loss in Pleasure:

5 of Cups or Chalices

A white radiating angelic hand, as before, holding lotuses or water lilies of which the flowers are falling right and left. Leaves only and no buds surmount them. These lotus stems ascend between the cups in the manner of a fountain, but no water flows therefrom, neither is there water in any of the cups, which are somewhat of the shape of the magical implement of the Zelator Adeptus Minor. Above and below are the symbols of Mars and Scorpio, representing the decan.

Death or end of pleasures. Disappointment. Sorrow and loss in those things from which pleasure is expected. Sadness, deceit, treachery, ill will, detraction, charity and kindness ill-requited. All kinds of anxieties and troubles from unexpected and unsuspected sources.

Geburah of Heh. (Disappointments in love, marriage broken off, unkindness from a friend, loss of friendship.) Therein rule Livoyah and Pehilyah.

Sun in Scorpio, 10°–20°. XXXI. Lord of Pleasure:

6 of Cups

An angelic hand, as before, holds a group of stems of lotuses or water lilies from which six flowers bend, one over each cup. From these flowers a white glistening water flows into the cup as from a fountain, but they are not yet full. Above and below are the symbols of sun and Scorpio, representing the decanate.

Commencement of steady increase, gain and pleasure, but commencement only. Also affront, defective knowledge, and in some instances, contention and strife, arising from unwarranted self-assertion and vanity. Sometimes thankless and presumptuous. Sometimes amiable and patient, according to dignity.

Tiphareth of Heh. (Beginning of wish, happiness, success, or enjoyment.) Therein rule Nelokhiel and Yeyayel.

Venus in Scorpio, 20°–30°. XXXII. Lord of Illusionary Success: 7 of Cups

The seven cups are thus arranged:

V	V	V
	V
V	V	V

A hand as usual holds the lotus stems which arise from the central lower cup. The hand is above this cup and below the middle one. With the exception of the central lower cup, each is overhung by a lotus flower, but no water falls from them into cups which are quite empty. Above and below are the symbols of the decanate, Venus and Scorpio.

Possible victory; but neutralized by the supineness of the person. Illusionary success. Deception in the moment of apparent victory. Lying error, promises unfulfilled. Drunkenness, wrath, vanity, lust, fornication, violence against women. Selfish dissipation. Deception in love and friendship. Often success gained, but not followed up. Modified by dignity.

Netzach of Heh (Lying. Promises unfulfilled. Illusion. Error. Deception, slight success at outset, but want of energy to retain it.) Therein rules Melchel and Chahaviah.

Mercury in Sagittarius, 1°–10°. XXXIII. The Lord of Swiftmess: 8 of Wands

Four white angelic hands radiating, two proceeding from each side, issuing from clouds, clasped in two pairs in the centre with the grip of First Order. They hold eight wands crossed four and four. Flames issue from the point of junction. Surmounting two small wands with flames issuing down them. Placed in the centre at top and bottom of card are the symbols of Mercury and Sagittarius, representing the decan.

Too much force applied too suddenly. Very rapid rush, but too quickly passed and expended. Violent but not lasting. Swiftmess. Rapidity. Courage, boldness, confidence, freedom, warfare. Violence, love of open air, field sports, garden, meadows. Generous, subtle, eloquent, yet somewhat untrustworthy. Rapacious, insolent, oppressive. Theft and robbery, according to dignity.

Hod of Yod. (Hasty communication and messages. Swiftmess.) Therein rule Nithahiah and Haäyah.

Moon in Sagittarius, 10°–20°. XXXIV. The Lord of Great Strength: 9 of Wands

Four hands as in the previous symbol holding eight wands crossed four and four, but a fifth hand at the foot of the card holds another wand upright, which traverses the point of junction with the others. Flames leap therefrom. Above and below, the symbols Luna (depicted horizontally) and Sagittarius.

Tremendous and steady force that cannot be shaken. Herculean strength, yet sometimes scientifically applied. Great success, but with strife and energy. Victory preceded by apprehension and fear. Health good and recovery, yet doubt. Generous, questioning and curious, fond of external appearances, intractable, obstinate.

Yesod of Yod. (Strength, power, health. Recovery from sickness.) Herein rule Yirthiel and Sahiah.

Saturn in Sagittarius, 20°–30°. XXXV. The Lord of Oppression: 10 of Wands

Four hands upholding eight wands crossed as before. A fifth hand at foot of card holding two wands upright which traverse the junction of the others. Above and below, the symbols Saturn and Sagittarius. Flames issue therefrom.

Cruel and overbearing force and energy, but applied only to selfish and material ends. Sometimes shows failure in a matter, and the opposition too strong to be controlled arising from the person's too great selfishness at the beginning. Levity, lying, malice, slander, envy, obstinacy, swiftness in evil, if ill-dignified. Also generosity, self-sacrifice, and disinterestedness when well-dignified.

Malkuth of Yod. (Cruelty, malice, revenge, and injustice.) Therein rule Reyayel and Avamel.

Jupiter in Capricorn, 1°–10°. XXXVI. Lord of Harmonious Change:

2 of Pentacles

Two wheels, discs, or pentacles similar to that of the Ace. They are united by a green and gold serpent, bound about them like a figure of eight. It holds its tail in its mouth. A white radiant angelic hand (grasps the centre or) holds the whole. No roses enter into this card. Above and below are the symbols Jupiter and Capricorn. It is a revolving symbol.

The harmony of change. Alternation of gain and loss, weakness and strength, ever varying occupation, wandering, discontented with any fixed condition of things; now elated, now melancholy, industrious yet unreliable, fortunate through prudence of management, yet sometimes unaccountably foolish. Alternately talkative and suspicious. Kind yet wavering and inconsistent. Fortunate in journeying. Argumentative.

Chokmah of Heh final. (Pleasant change, visit to friends.) Herein rule Lekabel and Veshiriah.

3 of Pentacles

*

*

Sun in Capricorn, 20°–30°. XXXVIII. The Lord of Earthly Power:
4 of Pentacles

*

*

*

Chesed of Heh final. (Gain of money or influence. A present.) Therein rule Keveqiah and Mendial.

Venus in Aquarius, 1°–10°. XXXIX. The Lord of Defeat:

5 of Swords

Two rayed hands each holding two swords nearly upright, but falling apart from each other, right and left of card. A third hand holds a sword upright in centre as if it had disunited them. The petals of the rose (which in the Four of Swords had been reinstated in the centre) are torn asunder and falling. Above and below the symbols of Venus and Aquarius.

Contest finished and decided against the person, failure, defeat, anxiety, trouble, poverty, avarice. Grieving after gain, laborious, unresting, loss and vileness of nature. Malicious, slandering, lying, spiteful, and tale-bearing. A busybody and separator of friends, hating to see peace and love between others. Cruel yet cowardly, thankless, and unreliable. Clever and quick in thought and speech. Feelings of pity easily roused but unenduring. As dignity.

Geburah of Vav. (Defeat, loss, malice, spite, slander, evil-speaking.) Herein rule Aniel and Chaamiah.

Mercury in Aquarius, 10°–20°. XL. The Lord of Earned Success:

6 of Swords

Two hands as before, each holding three swords which cross in centre. Rose re-established hereon. Mercury and Aquarius above and below, supported on the points of two short daggers or swords.

Success after anxiety and trouble. Selfishness, beauty, conceit, but sometimes modesty therewith, dominion, patience, labour, etc., according to dignity.

Tiphareth of Vav. (Labour, work, journey by water.) Herein rule Rehaayal and Yeyeziel.

Moon in Aquarius, 20°–30°. XLI. The Lord of Unstable Effort:

7 of Swords

Two hands as before, each holding swords. A third hand holds a single sword in the centre. The points of all the swords do just touch one another, the central sword not altogether dividing them. The rose of the previous symbols of this suit is held by the hand which holds the central sword, as if the victory were in its disposal. Above and below, Luna and Aquarius. (In the small cards, the lunar decans are always represented by a crescent on its back.)

Partial success, yielding when victory is within grasp, as if the last reserves of strength were used up. Inclination to lose when on the point of gaining through not continuing the effort. Love of abundance, fascinated by display, given to compliment, affronts and insolences, and to detect and spy on another. Inclined to betray confidences, not always intentional. Rather vacillating and unreliable, according to dignity as usual.

Netzach of Vav. (Journey by land, in character untrustworthy.) Herein rule Michael and Hahihel.

Saturn in Pisces, 1°–10°. XLII. The Lord of Abandoned Success: 8 of Cups

A hand holding a group of stems of lotuses or water lilies. There are only two flowers shown which bend over the two centre cups pouring into them a white water. The cups are not yet filled.

Y	Y	Y
	Y Y
Y	Y	Y

The three upper cups are empty. At top and bottom, Saturn and Pisces.

Temporary success, but without further result. Things thrown aside as soon as gained. No lasting even in the matter in hand. Indolence in success. Journeying from place to place. Misery and repining without cause. Seeking after riches. Instability according to dignity.

Hod of Heh. (Success abandoned, decline of interest in anything.) Herein rule Vavaliah and Yelahiah.

Jupiter in Pisces, 10°–20°. XLIII. The Lord of Material Happiness: 9 of Cups

Hand from cloud holding lotuses or water lilies, one flower of which overhangs each cup, and from which water pours.

Y	Y	Y
Y	Y	Y
Y	Y	Y

All the cups are full and running over. Above and below are the symbols of Jupiter and Pisces representing the decan.

Complete and perfect realization of pleasure and happiness almost perfect. Self-praise, vanity, conceit, much talking of self, yet kind and lovable, and may be self-denying therewith. High-minded, not easily satisfied with small and limited ideas. Apt to be maligned through too much self-assumption. A good, generous, but, maybe, foolish nature.

Yesod of Heh. (Complete success, pleasure, happiness, wish fulfilled.) Therein rule Saliah and Aariel.

Mars in Pisces, 20°–30°. XLIV. The Lord of Perfected Success: 10 of Cups

Hand holding bunch of lotuses or water lilies whose flowers pour a pure white water into all the cups, which all run over.

Y	Y	Y
Y	Y	Y
Y	Y	Y

The top cup is held sideways by a hand and pours water into top left hand cup. A single lotus flower surmounts top cup and is the source of the water that fills it. Above and below, Mars and Pisces.

Permanent and lasting success, happiness because inspired from above. Not sensual as Nine of Cups, “The Lord of Material Happiness,” yet almost more truly happy. Pleasure, dissipation, debauchery. Pity, quietness, peacemaking. Kindness, generosity, wantonness, waste, etc., according to dignity. Malkuth of Heh. (Matters definitely arranged as wished, complete good fortune.) Herein rule Aasliah and Mihal.

Mars in Aries, 1°–10°. XLV. The Lord of Dominion:

2 of Wands

Hand grasping two wands crossed. Flames issue from the point of junction. On two small wands, above and below, with flames issuing from them, are Mars and Aries.

Strength, dominion, harmony of rule and justice. Boldness, courage, fierceness, shamelessness, revenge, resolution, generous, proud, sensitive, ambitious, refined, restless, turbulent, sagacious withal, yet unforgiving and obstinate, according to dignity.

Chokmah of Yod. (Influence over others. Authority, power, dominion.) Rule therein Vehooel and Deneyal.

Sun in Aries, 10°–20°. XLVI. The Lord of Established Strength:

3 of Wands

Hand issuing from clouds holds three wands in centre. Two crossed and one upright. Flames from point of junction. Above and below, sun and Aries.

Established force and strength. Realization of hope. Completion of labour, success of the struggle. Pride, nobility, wealth, power, conceit. Rude self-assumption and insolence. Generosity, obstinacy according to dignity.

Binah of Yod. (Pride, arrogance, and self-assertion.) Herein rule Hechashiah and Aamamiah.

Venus in Aries, 20°–30°. XLVII. Lord of Perfected Work:

4 of Wands

Two hands as before, issuing from clouds each side of card, and clasped in centre with First Order grip, holding four wands crossed. Flames issue at point of junction. Above and below on two small flaming wands are Venus and Aries, representing the decan.

Perfection, a completion of a thing built up with trouble and labour. Rest after labour. Subtlety, cleverness, beauty, mirth, success in completion. Reasoning faculty, conclusions drawn from previous knowledge. Unreadiness, unreliable, and unsteady, through over anxiety and hurriedness of action. Graceful in manners. At times insincere, etc.

Chesed of Yod. (Settlement, arrangement, completion.) Herein rule Nanael and Nithal.

Mercury in Taurus, 1°–10°. XLVIII. Lord of Material Trouble: 5 of Pentacles Hand holding a branch of white rose tree, from which roses are falling, leaving no buds behind. Five pentacles similar to Ace. Mercury and Taurus for decan.

Loss of money or position. Trouble about material things. Toil, labour, land cultivation, building, knowledge and acuteness of earthly things, poverty, carefulness. Kindness, sometimes money regained after severe toil and labour. Unimaginative, harsh, stern, determined, obstinate.

Geburah of Heh final. (Loss of profession, loss of money, monetary anxiety.) Therein rule Mabahiah and Pooyal.

Moon in Taurus, 10°–20°. XLIX. Lord of Material Success: 6 of Pentacles Hand holding a rose branch with white roses and buds, each of which touch a pentacle, arranged thus:

*	*
*	*
*	*

Above and below, Luna and Taurus represent the decanate.

Success and gain in material undertakings, power, influence, rank, nobility, rule over the people. Fortunate, successful, just, and liberal. If ill-dignified, may be purse-proud, insolent from success, or prodigal.

Tiphareth of Heh final. (Success in material things. Prosperity in business.) Herein rule Nemamah and Yeyelal.

Saturn in Taurus, 20°–30°. L. The Lord of Success Unfulfilled: 7 of Pentacles

Hand from a cloud holding rose branch of seven pentacles thus arranged:

Only five of which overhang but do not touch the five upper pentacles. No other buds shown, and none are near or touch the two lower pentacles. Above and below, Saturn and Taurus.

Promises of success unfulfilled. (Shown in the symbolism of the rosebuds, which do not as it were come to anything.) Loss of apparently promising fortune. Hopes deceived and crushed. Disappointment. Misery, slavery, necessity, and baseness. A cultivator of land, and yet is loser thereby. Sometimes it denotes slight and isolated gains with no fruits resulting therefrom, and of no further account, though seeming to promise well. According to dignity.

Netzach of Heh. (Unprofitable speculation and employment. Little gain for much labour.) Therein rule Herochiel and Mitzrael.

Jupiter in Gemini, 1°–10°. LI. Lord of Shortened Force: 8 of Swords

Four hands as usual, each holding two swords, points upwards, touching near top of card, two hands lower on left, two on right of card. The rose of other sword symbols re-established in centre. Above and below, Jupiter and Gemini.

Too much force applied to small things, too much attention to detail, at expense of principle and more important points. Ill-dignified, these qualities produce malice, pettiness, and domineering qualities. Patience in detail of study, great ease in some things, counterbalanced by equal disorder in others. Impulsive, equally fond of giving or receiving money or presents.

Generous, clever, acute, selfish, and without strong feeling of affection. Admires wisdom, yet applies it to small and unworthy objects.

Hod of Vav. (Narrow, restricted, petty, a prison.) Herein rule Vemibael and Yehohel.

Mars in Gemini, 10°–20°. LII. The Lord of Despair and Cruelty: 9 of Swords

Four hands (somewhat as in preceding symbol) hold eight swords upright but with the points falling away from each other. A fifth hand holds a ninth sword upright in the centre, as if it had disunited them, and struck them asunder. No rose at all is shown (as if it were not merely cut in pieces but completely and definitely destroyed). Above and below Mars and Gemini.

Despair, cruelty, pitilessness, malice, suffering, want, loss, misery. Burden, oppression, labour, subtlety and craft, lying, dishonesty, slander. Yet also obedience, faithfulness, patience, unselfishness, etc., according to dignity.

Yesod of Vav. Therein rule Aaneval and Mochayel.

Sun in Gemini, 20°–30°. LIII. Lord of Ruin: 10 of Swords

Four hands (as in previous symbol) hold eight swords with points falling away from each other. Two hands hold two swords crossed in the centre (as if their junction had disunited the others). No rose, flower, or bud is shown. Above and below, sun and Gemini.

(Almost a worse symbol than Nine of Swords.) Undisciplined warring force, complete disruption and failure. Ruin of all plans and projects. Disdain, insolence and impertinence, yet mirth and jolly therewith. A Marplot,⁵ loving to overthrow the happiness of others, a repeater of things, given to much unprofitable speech, and of many words, yet clever, acute, and eloquent, etc., depending on dignity.

Malkuth of Vav. (Ruin, death, defeat, disruption.) Herein rule Dambayah and Menqal.

Venus in Cancer, 1°–10°. LIV. Lord of Love:

2 of Cups

Hand at lower part from cloud holds lotuses. A lotus flower rises above water, which occupies the lowest part of card, and rises above the hand holding the lotus. From this lotus flower a stem rises, terminating nearly at the top of the card in another lotus or water lily flower, from which a white water gushes like a fountain. Crossed on the stem just beneath are two dolphins, gold and silver, onto which the water falls and from which it pours in full streams, like jets of gold and silver, into two cups, which in their turn overflow, flooding the lower part of the card. Above and below, Venus and Cancer.

Harmony of masculine and feminine united. Harmony, pleasure, mirth, subtlety, sometimes folly, dissipation, waste, and silly action, according to dignity.

Chokmah of Heh. (Marriage, home, pleasure.) Herein rule Ayoel and Chabooyah.

Mercury in Cancer, 10°–20°. LV. Lord of Abundance:

3 of Cups

Hand as before holds group of lotuses or water lilies, from which two flowers rise on either side of and overhanging the top cup, pouring into it the white water. Flowers in the same way pour water into the lower cups. All the cups overflow, the topmost into the two others, and these upon the lower part of the card. Above and below, Mercury and Cancer.

Y Y

Abundance, plenty, success, pleasure, sensuality, passive success, good luck, and fortune. Love, gladness, kindness, and bounty. According to dignity.

Binah of Heh. (Plenty, hospitality, eating and drinking, pleasure, dancing, new clothes, merriment.) Herein rule Rahael and Yebomayah.

Moon in Cancer, 20°–30°. LVI. The Lord of Blended Pleasure: 4 of Cups

Four cups, the two upper overflow into the two lower, which do not overflow. A hand grasps a bunch of lotuses from which ascends a stem bearing one flower at the top of the card, from which water issues into two top cups. From the centre two leaves pass right and left, making as it were a cross between the four cups. Luna and Cancer, above and below.

Success or pleasure, approaching their end. A stationary period in happiness which may or may not continue. It does not show marriage and love so much as the previous symbol. It is too passive a symbol to represent perfectly complete happiness. Swiftmess, hunting, and pursuing. Acquisition by contention; injustice sometimes. Some drawbacks to pleasure implied.

Chesed of Heh. (Receiving pleasure, but some slight discomfort and anxieties, therewith. Blended pleasure and success.) Therein rule Hayayel and Mevamayah.

Note: Here finishes the description of the thirty-six decanates of the zodiac. Although the angels of the Schem ha-Mephoresch have been linked with the decanates, yet their dominion is far more exalted, extended, and important than this would at first sight seem to imply. In all of this I have not only transcribed the symbolism, but have tested, studied, compared, and examined it both clairvoyantly and in other ways. The result of these has been to show me how absolutely correct the symbolism of the Book “T” is, and how exactly it represents the occult forces of the universe.

Tarot Divination

This form is especially applicable to divination concerning the ordinary material events of daily life.

It is a mode of placing the cards based upon the scheme of the dominion of the tarot symbols. The more rigidly correct and in harmony with the scheme of the universe is any form of divination, so much the more is it likely to yield a correct and reliable answer to the enquirer. For then and then only is there a firm link, and bond of union, established between it and the occult forces of nature. The moment the correct correspondence of the symbols employed ceases to be observed, the link between them and the inner occult forces is strained, and in some cases broken. For this cause, therefore, is it that the same mode of divination will sometimes yield a true and sometimes false answer, and at other times a partly true and partly false; because the correspondences are either not rigidly observed or else made use of by an ignorant and uninitiated person.

Therefore the diviner should enter upon the divination with a mind clear and unprejudiced, neither disturbed by anger, fear, nor love, and with a sound knowledge of the correspondences of the symbols which he employs. Also he should be able to employ his clairvoyant and intuitive faculties therein when necessary and should avoid as much as possible a warped or strained decision. Also it is not well to divine repeatedly concerning the same matter; and the diviner should also recognize that even the material occult forces do not act as the instruments of a blind fatality, but rather in accordance with the will of the more spiritual powers which are behind them.

Also it may be well for the diviner to put on his insignia and make over the pack an invoking hexagram or pentagram, either with the hand alone, or with convenient magical instruments. And it may also be advisable in some instances to invoke an elemental force consonant with the matter, to aid in the divination.

And let it not be forgotten that in working with the lesser magical implements all the four should be at hand, even though only one be actually employed. For if this be not done, it will give undue force to the suit corresponding to the element invoked, and instead of being an aid in the matter, it will be a hindrance to correct reading.⁶

The Opening of the Key

The mode of performing the divination called “the Opening of the Key” is by five consecutive operations of laying out the cards, they having been previously well shuffled, and, in addition in the first and fourth cases, having been cut as well, and in a certain manner. These five operations answer, respectively, the first to the dominion of the Four Princesses under the presidency of the Four Aces; the second to that of the Kings, Queens, and Princes, referred to the twelve houses; the third to that of the twelve keys attributed to the signs; the fourth to that of the smaller cards answering to the thirty-six decanates; and the fifth and last to the rule of the Sephiroth in the celestial heavens.

These are five distinct operations, consecutively executed from the mode of operation called “the Opening of the Key,” which, as has been before said, is especially applicable to the daily events of life. The first of these methods shows the opening of the matter as it then stands. The second, third, and fourth, its consecutive development, and the fifth its termination.

Before commencing the divination, one of the sixteen court cards should be selected to represent the significator of the enquirer, and should answer as nearly to his description.

Wands generally—very fair-haired and red-haired persons with fair complexion.

Cups generally—moderately fair persons.

Swords generally—dark persons.

Pentacles generally—very dark persons.

Kings—Generally men.

Queens—Generally women.

Princes (Knights)—Generally young men.

Princesses (Knaves)—Generally young women.

Of these the Queens and Princes in reading the cards during the processes almost always represent persons connected with a matter under consideration. The Kings, if looking against the direction of the reading, or if meeting it, represent the coming of a person or event, or phase of an event, but if looking with the direction of the reading represent the departure of a person or the going off or wane of some event.

The Princesses (Knaves) if looking with the direction of the reading, represent general opinion in harmony with, and approving the matter; but if looking against the direction of the reading the reverse.

If the diviner be performing the divination for a person at a distance and of whose general description he is ignorant, he can select the significator by cutting the pack and, taking one of the court cards of that suit, cut to represent him of course earnestly thinking of the person at the time.

It is usually much better for the enquirer to shuffle or cut the cards himself; but if the diviner should have to do this himself, he must, while doing so, earnestly think of the person enquiring, or concerning whom the divination is performed. In all cases of shuffling and cutting, the person doing so should think earnestly of the matter in hand. In cutting, if a false cut be made, that is to say if one or more cards should drop in the process, the cards should be at once reshuffled, and again cut clearly, otherwise it is probable that the answer will be unreliable.⁷

In the laying out of the cards, if any are inverted, they must remain so and must not be turned round, as that would alter the direction in which they would be looking. A card has the same meaning and forces, whether right or inverted, so that no particular attention need be paid to the circumstances.

The order of the cards as laid down must also not be interfered with. In the reading of the cards when laid out, the significator of the enquirer is the starting point, and reading proceeds by counting over certain cards in the direction in which the face of the court card chosen as significator of the enquirer is turned.

The mode of counting is as follows, recognizing the card from which one starts as the No. 1.

From every Ace—five cards (spirit and four elements).

Princess (Knave)—seven cards (seven palaces of Malkuth).

King, Queen, Prince—four cards (letters of Tetragrammaton).

Smaller cards—its own number (a Sephirah).

Key of Aleph Mem Shin—three cards (number of the Mother letters).

Key of duplicated letters—nine cards (number of planets and Caput and Cauda Draconis).

Key of single letters—twelve cards (number of signs).

The counting is continued till one alights on a card which has already been read.

Thus, in the following example, we will suppose that the significator is the Queen of Cups, and that she is looking to the left. We should read as follows: Queen of Cups—a fair woman; counting four, we come to Five of Pentacles, i.e., “Loss of money” (and as it has on one side the Moon and on the other a card of Pentacles, it shows that it is through deception in business matters), we then count five, the number of the card, from the Five of Pentacles, which falls on the Six of Cups, “Success.” But as this has on one side the Foolish Man, and on the other the Ace of Wands, this will not be great owing to unwise conduct. Then we count six from the Six of Cups, still going in the same direction which brings us to the Queen of Cups, a card we have already read, so we finish there.

Thus the reading will be “A rather fair woman has lost money through some cheating in business, and though she is again beginning to succeed, this success is liable to be damaged by unwise conduct on her part for which she will have herself to thank.”

If the significator were the Knave of Wands, and (looking towards the right) we should count seven to the Two of Pentacles, then two from that to the Five of Pentacles; then five from that to the Hierophant, twelve from that to the Queen of Cups, four from that to the King of Pentacles; then four to the Foolish Man, and thence three to the Two of Pentacles, where we stop, having read that card already. “A young woman is just making a change in her business, which brings her loss of money through some deceit on the part of a fair woman, and a dark man whose foolish advice has led to the change.” The cards would then be paired two by two, from opposite ends as hereafter shown, thus: Moon and Tower, “The deceit is discovered.” Five of Pentacles and Queen of Cups, “on the part of this person who has brought about her loss.” Two of Pentacles and Hierophant, “by advising the change.” Knight of Cups and Knave of Wands, “for the young woman meets an older man.” King of Pentacles and Fool, “who counteract the foolish advice of the dark man.” Ace of Wands and Six of Cups, “and she in consequence succeeds better, but only by the dint of energy and hard work.”

The scheme of divination called “the Opening of the Key” is worked out in the following manner. I adjoin an example carried carefully through the five stages for the instruction of the Zelator Adeptus Minor. The complete pack of 78 cards is employed.

FIRST OPERATION:

Representing the Opening of the Question

The significator being chosen, the enquirer shuffles the cards, thinking earnestly of the matter under consideration. He then places the cards in a single packet on the table before him, face downwards. This represents the Name YHVH, which is now to be separated into the component letters. He therefore is to cut the pack as nearly in the middle as his eye can direct, and to face the uppermost portion to the right of the lowermost; the former will represent YH and the latter VH (final). He again is to cut the packet to the right hand into two parts, as nearly in the centre as he can, and place the uppermost part to the right again. This will represent Y and the lower part the remaining H. He is now to cut the packet to the left, its uppermost part will represent V and its lower part H (final). So that he will now have four packets nearly equal in size, answering from right to left to the name YHVH—יְהוָה under the presidency of the four Princesses (Knives) and through them to the four radical forces (Aces).

These four packets are then turned face upwards without altering their relative position, and the meaning of their four bottom cards thus shown may be read as an indication of the matter. Each packet is now examined to find in which the significator of the enquirer is, being careful not to alter the order of the cards. The packet containing the significator is retained for reading, and the others are put aside and not used in this particular reading (operation).

Carefully note to which of the four letters the packet containing the significator of the enquirer corresponds. If to Y and wands, energy and strife. If to H and cups, pleasure. If to V and swords, sickness and trouble. If to H final and pentacles, business and money. The packet containing the significator is now spread out face upwards in the form of a horseshoe (count in the way the significator looks) and its meaning is read in the manner previously described. First by counting to certain cards until one is alighted upon which has been previously read; and then by pairing them together in succession from opposite ends of the horseshoe. (You do not miss the significator.)

Before commencing counting from the significator, the diviner should first notice what suit predominates in the number of cards. In this a majority of wands would signify energy, quarrelling, opposition. Of cups, pleasure and merriment. Of swords, trouble and sadness, sometimes sickness and death. Of pentacles, business, money, possession, etc. Also if in the cards laid out there should be either three or four cards of a sort, such as three Aces, four Fives, etc., their meaning should be noted according to the table hereafter given. A majority of the Keys shows forces beyond one's control.

Example

Supposing that a young man asks the question "Shall I succeed in my present affairs?" His complexion is fair, and his hair is light brown. The diviner therefore takes the Prince of Cups ⁸ for significator (had he been an older man he would have selected the King of the same suit instead), and requests enquirer to carefully shuffle the pack and place it face downwards on the table before him. He then instructs him to cut the pack as nearly in the centre as possible, and to place the uppermost half well to the right, and then to cut each of the packets as nearly in the centre as possible, putting each uppermost half to the right of and beside the lower half, thus yielding four packets of nearly equal dimensions.

Here the Ten of Wands is strong, being in the place of Yod which governs wands—fire. The Six of Swords is moderately strong, being in the place of Heh which rules cups—water, which is not a hostile and contrary element to air; the Four of Pentacles is weak because it is in the place of Vau which rules the contrary element to earth, viz. air; and the Chariot—Cancer, a watery sign is fairly strong, being in the place of Heh final, which rules earth, a friendly element to water.

The diviner then reads these four cards as a preliminary thus: “The enquirer works very hard and gains but little money, yet matters are beginning to improve,” because the Ten of Wands shows cruelty, harshness, etc.; Six of Swords, labour and work; Four of Pentacles, gain of money; and the Chariot, success.

The diviner then examines the four packets to find in which one the significator is. It proves to be in the one of which the Six of Swords is the bottom card. This is in the place answering to the letter Heh, which represents pleasure and rules Cups. This is so far a good omen, as it shows society and merriment. This pack of cards is retained for reading, the others are put aside as not bearing on the question. Let us suppose that this packet consists of twenty cards, and that they are in the following order. The diviner spreads them out in the form of a horseshoe:

First Operation—Example

The suit of Cups is distinctly in the majority—pleasure, visiting friends, love making, etc. There are three Knaves which indicates society of the young, from which the diviner reads that the enquirer is fond of young people and of flirting, etc. There being no other set of three or four cards of a sort, the diviner proceeds to read by counting from the significator, whose face is turned towards the Nine of Wands.

The counting therefore proceeds in the direction of the arrow, thus: four from the King of Cups, Ten of Pentacles. Ten from this, Eight of Cups. Eight from this, Wheel of Fortune. Nine from this, Knave of Wands. Seven from this, Ten of Cups. Ten from this, Five of Wands. Five from this, Knight of Wands. Four from this, Ace of Pentacles. Five from this, Ten of Cups. And as this card has already been taken, this form of reading finishes here.

In this reading as hereafter explained, each card is modified by the card in either side of it; if it be an end card, such as the Six of Swords, in this case it is modified not only by the card next to it, Ace of Pentacles, but also by the card at the opposite end, Knave of Wands.

If these cards are of a contrary element to the card itself, they very much weaken and neutralize its force, but if the contrary element is only in one card, and the other is of a connecting nature, it does not much matter. This is explained later among the tabulated rules. The King of Cups is between the Nine of Wands and the Wheel of Fortune, both of which cards are of a fiery nature, and therefore contrary to Cups which is water, and therefore it shows that the enquirer is rather lacking in perseverance and energy. Ten of Pentacles, “His business will begin to prosper,” Eight of Cups, “but yet he will lose interest in it, owing to his love of pleasure and society” (shown by Eight of Cups having the suit on each side of it). Wheel of Fortune, “and through his fortune changing for the better.” Knave of Wands (Knight of Wands on one side and Six of Swords on the other), “He yet is anxious through falling in love with a graceful and sprightly girl with chestnut hair and fair complexion whom he has recently met” (shown by Knight of Wands turned contrary to the course of the reading). Ten of Cups, “His suit is at first favourably received,” Five of Swords, “but some slanderous reports and mischief making” (not altogether without foundation) “come to her knowledge.” Ace of Pentacles, “though his increasing prosperity in business,” Ten of Cups, “had led her to regard him with favour.”

The diviner now pairs the cards from opposite ends of the horseshoe, thus:

Knave of Wands	“She is anxious about this.”
Six of Swords
Knight of Wands	“And he begins to neglect his business, which yet is fairly good.”
Ace of Pentacles
Three of Cups	“And instead throws aside his business for pleasures.”
Two of Pentacles
Knight of Cups	“The consequence of this is that the engagement between them is broken off, shown by Knight being turned in the opposite direction.”
Five of Cups
Ten of Pentacles	“Still, his business does fairly well, though he is losing interest in it.”
Eight of Cups
Five of Swords	“The matter is the subject of much gossip ...”
Ten of Cups
Nine of Wands	These two cards are of contrary suits and therefore of little importance “... among their acquaintances.”
Queen of Cups

King of Cups	“He, moreover, begins to pay attention to another girl of not quite so fair complexion.”
Knave of Cups
Wheel of Fortune	“Who, however, prefers a dark man, who is much admired by the fair sex” (shown by his being next two Knaves and a Queen).
King of Swords
Six of Wands	“But he has already gained the affections of a girl with dark brown eyes and hair.” (This description is obtained by mixing the effects of the wands with pentacles.)
Knave of Pentacles

This concludes the reading in the first operation, which may be thus resumed:

“The enquirer is a fair young man who works very hard, and has hitherto gained but little money, yet matters are beginning to improve. He is fond of society, and of visiting friends. He is rather lacking in perseverance and energy, though notwithstanding this, his business and money transactions will begin to prosper. But yet he will lose interest in it owing to his love of pleasure and society, and though his fortune is changing for the better he has yet much anxiety through falling in love with a graceful and sprightly girl with chestnut hair and fair complexion whom he has recently met. His suit is at first favourably received, but some slanderous tales and mischief-making—not altogether without foundation—come to her knowledge, though his increasing prosperity in business has led her to regard him with favour. She is made anxious by this, and he begins to neglect his business which yet is fairly good, and instead abandons it for pleasure and merry-making.

“The consequence of this is that the engagement is broken off. Still his business does fairly well though he has lost interest in it. The whole affair is the subject of much gossip among their mutual acquaintances. (One of the chief mischief-makers is a fair middle-aged woman shown by the Queen of Cups.) He, however, soon begins to pay attention to another girl of not quite so fair a complexion. She, however, prefers a dark young man who is much admired generally by the fair sex, but he has already gained the affection of a young woman with dark brown hair and blue eyes.”

SECOND OPERATION:

Representing the Development of the Matter

The enquirer again carefully shuffles the cards and places the pack on the table face downwards, but is not to cut them. The diviner now takes the pack and deals it round card by card in twelve packets face downwards in rotation as in the following diagram: (deal and read in order of houses against the direction of the sun), so that the first packet answering to the ascendant will consist of the first, thirteenth, twenty-fifth, thirty-seventh, forty-ninth, sixty-first, seventy-third cards, as shown, and so on.

This operation is under the presidency of the court cards, whose dominion in the celestial heavens falls immediately between that of the four Knaves and that of the keys answering to the twelve signs of the zodiac. It represents the twelve astrological houses of heaven, as shown. Without altering the relative order of the packets, or of the cards in the packets, the diviner examines each in succession, till he finds the one which contains the significator. This he retains for reading, noting carefully to which astrological house it corresponds, and gathers up the other packets and puts them aside, as they are not of any further use in this operation.

Second Operation—Twelve Houses

As before, the diviner reads the packet containing the significator by spreading them out in the form of a horseshoe, first reading by counting the cards in order from the significator in the direction in which the face of the figure on the card is turned, and next by pairing the cards together from the opposite ends of the horseshoe. It is hardly likely that in so small a packet there will be either three or four cards of a sort, but if there be, the diviner takes note of the same, and also observes which suit predominates. I now continue the examples commenced in the previous operation. I must here observe that the example is purely of my own invention, and of course is not contained in the Book “T,” wherein only the mode of working is given. I have purposely taken a commonplace, trivial, and material question for elucidation. (S.R.M.D.)

Example (Cont.)

We will suppose the enquirer to have duly and carefully shuffled the cards, thinking of his affairs, and that the diviner has dealt them round into twelve packets as above shown. The packet containing the significator is located in the ascendant, and it contains the following cards in the order given.

This mode of reading shows that as the significator is in the ascendant it will principally relate to the enquirer’s manner of living at this point.

The significator is in this case right way up, whereas in the previous reading it was inverted, and is looking towards the Nine of Swords, which direction therefore the reading proceeds, counting thus: four from King of Cups—Knave of Pentacles; seven from this—Sun; nine from this—Knave of Pentacles; seven from this—Sun; where the reading ends.

King of Cups	“The enquirer is unhappy” (looking to 9 of Swords) “and makes the acquaintance of the girl with the dark hair and blue eyes with whom the dark young man (his rival) is in love. (She is artistic and well-mannered, and hopes to carry out her wishes, i.e., to marry the dark man with whom the fair girl, to whom the enquirer has transferred his affection, is now in love.) For she is beginning to be apprehensive regarding her success, and is jealous in consequence.”
Knave of Pentacles

Pairing the cards from opposite ends of the horseshoe, the diviner proceeds:

King of Cups	“The Enquirer is anxious, and his health begins to suffer ...”
Nine of Swords
Eight of Pentacles	“... but hopes ultimately to succeed through skillful action in the matter.”
Sun
Four of Swords	“He therefore endeavours to make a friend of the dark girl.”

Knave of Pentacles
Temperance	“As he expects to realize his wishes by his means in the end.” (This is shown by the card being single in the end.)

THIRD OPERATION:

Continuing the Development of the Question

The enquirer again carefully shuffles the cards, while thinking earnestly of his affairs. The pack is not cut. The diviner deals out the cards into twelve packets in precisely the same manner as in the second operation. Only instead of being referred to the twelve astrological houses, these twelve packets are under the presidency of the twelve keys of the tarot attributed to the twelve signs of the zodiac. The first packet, Emperor—Aries; the second, Hierophant—Taurus; the third, Lovers—Gemini; and so on. As before the diviner selects the packet which contains the significator for reading, and rejects the rest. He notes also the meaning of the key answering to the sign of the zodiac, under which the packet falls. He spreads the cards out in the form of a horseshoe, exactly as before. I now continue the example before commenced.

Example

We will suppose that the packet containing the King of Cups is that whose position answers to the Hierophant—Taurus—and that it consists of the following cards, arranged as in the diagram.

The Hierophant and the majority of the cards in this packet being keys alike show that the forces at present at work are ceasing to be under the control of the enquirer. The reading proceeds according to the usual order of counting, as follows: King of Cups—Two of Wands; Magician—Queen of Wands;

Universe—Tower; Two of Wands again. It may be mentioned that supposing a packet to consist of six cards, and the significator to be a Knave, or counting seven from it, it would come back to the Knave again, this would show that the enquirer would act according to his own ideas in this point of the question, and would not let his line of action be influenced by the opinion of others. (The reading would then proceed by the pairing of the cards as usual:)

King of Cups	“Though anxious concerning several matters, he (the Enquirer) is beginning to succeed better by this line of action.
Two of Wands
Magician	“which seems to be quite the best. But the older woman (who previously made mischief and was represented by the Queen of Cups in the first operation) who is artful and a gossip ...
Queen of Wands
Universe— Tower	“... again injures the matter because she wishes to get an influence over the Enquirer herself.”
Two of Wands

Pairing the cards, the diviner proceeds:

Two of Wands	“Her influence cunningly exercised, brings about a complete disruption of the whole matter.
Tower
Universe	“The entire matter becomes invested with trickery and glamour ...
Magician
Queen of Wands	“... as she herself pays him a good deal of attention and sympathy,
King of Cups
Two of Pentacles	“which furthers her plans by bringing about a friendship between them.”

FOURTH OPERATION:

The Further Development of the Question

As before the enquirer is instructed to shuffle the pack and place it on the table but not to cut it.

The diviner takes the pack, turns it face upwards, and goes through it, being careful not to disarrange the order of the cards, till he finds the significator; at this point he cuts the pack, that is to say, he takes the significator and the cards which had been beneath it and places them on the top of the remainder, turning the whole face downwards again, ready for dealing out.⁹

The consequence of this operation is that the significator becomes the top card in the pack (bottom, really; face on table.) The diviner takes off the significator, places it face upwards on the middle of the table and then the following thirty-six decanates—thirty-six cards—out in the form of a circle round it, face upwards, answering to the thirty-six decanates of the zodiac, and showing the further development of the question. These are dealt round in the order and direction of dealing as the twelve packets in the two previous operations.

The reading proceeds by the same law of counting, but instead of counting from the significator itself, it begins from the first card of the thirty-six, and always goes in the direction of dealing. The suit which is in the majority and the circumstances of either three or four cards of a sort being found in the thirty-six decanates are also noted. When the reading by counting is finished the cards are paired together: first and thirty-sixth; second and thirty-fifth; third and thirty-fourth; and so on, placed in order successively upon the significator. I now continue the example before commenced:

Example

We will suppose the enquirer to have shuffled the pack, and that the diviner takes it in his hands, and in turning it up finds the bottom card to be Temperance. On going through it he comes to the significator, thus:

Fourth Operation—Cutting the Cards

He therefore takes the cards from King of Cups to Temperance included and places them above ¹⁰ the Five of Pentacles, being careful not to disturb their relative order. This has really the effect of cutting the pack between the Queen of Wands and the King of Cups and of course when he again turns them face downwards ready for dealing, the King of Cups will necessarily be the top card and the Queen of Wands the bottom card; Temperance being immediately above the Five of Pentacles, the former top card. The diviner takes the top card, the significator, and places it face upwards in the centre, and then deals round in succession thirty-six cards, face upwards in the order shown in the diagram on page 730.

Fourth Operation—Example

Let us suppose them to be thus arranged. The reading always proceeds in the same direction as the dealing in this form of operation, commencing the counting from the first card dealt.

We here find twelve out of the twenty-two keys; Seven of Wands; Seven of Cups; Five of Swords; Six of Pentacles; total thirty-seven including significator. The preponderance of the keys represent “influences beyond the control of the enquirer.” There are four Princes (Kings)—“meetings with influential persons,” and four Eights, “much news and correspondence.”

The counting proceeds as follows from the first card dealt. King of Cups—Six of Cups—Five of Pentacles—Hermit—Four of Cups—Fortitude—Four of Swords—Seven of Cups—Justice—Five of Cups—King of Swords—Emperor—Six of Cups again.

King of Cups	“The enquirer’s love of pleasure-going,
Six of Cups
Five of Pentacles	“brings about loss of money and business,
Hermit	“and he is forced to be more prudent,
Four of Cups	“and not go into the society of others too much, which has already brought him anxiety” (shown by Four of Cups between two wands, contrary element weakening effect of this card).
Fortitude	“He works more closely,

Four of Swords	“and begins to get better.
Seven of Cups	“Yet he has not sufficient energy in his nature to stick to work for long.
Justice	“The retributive effect of this is ...
Five of Cups	“... That he loses his friends.
King of Wands	“And his former rival who, though rather a vain man, is energetic and hard working ...
Emperor	“... replaces him in popularity and esteem.”
Six of Cups

Pairing them now, the diviner proceeds:

King of Cups	“The enquirer loses pleasure in consequence
Death
Six of Cups
Four of Swords	“and becomes less energetic even than before, and more anxious for pleasure-going than ever,
Seven of Cups
Moon	“yielding to the temptation of idleness and vanity by means of fraud.
Chariot
Eight of Swords	“He embezzles the money of his employer, and sees prison staring him in the face.
Ace of Pentacles
Eight of Cups	“The result of this is the loss of good name ...
Temperance
Three of Pentacles	“... and of his situation of trust.
Five of Pentacles
Ten of Wands	“His former friends and admirers turn a cold shoulder to him.
Two of Cups
Foolish Man	“And the result of his folly is that he is arrested and brought before a court of law.
Justice
Seven of Wands	“The decision is adverse ...

Hierophant
Judgment	“... and judgment very justly given against him.
Hermit
Emperor
King of Wands	“But his employer, though stern, is a kind-hearted man, and ...
Two of Swords	“... offers to take him back and overlook the past ...
Nine of Wands
Star	“... as he hopes this will have proved a lesson to him,
Fortitude
King of Swords	“and points out to him that his former rival,
King of Pentacles
Three of Wands	“though perhaps vain, was yet a hard-working and good man of business.
Eight of Pentacles
Four of Cups	“The enquirer in consequence of this determines to completely give up his former mode of life which had brought him to the brink of ruin, and becomes a steady man.
Ten of Swords
Eight of Wands	“After this he suddenly receives a hasty message which gives him much pleasure,
Six of Wands
Five of Cups	“stating that owing to the loss of a relative he is the inheritor of a legacy.”
Nine of Pentacles

This concludes the fourth operation.

It is always necessary for the diviner to employ his intuition in reading, and sometimes he may have to clairvoyantly “go through” a card of doubtful signification. Thus in the reading just given it is only the circumstance of the Moon, Chariot, Eight of Swords, Ace of Pentacles being followed by other conformative cards which justifies such an evil meaning of them.

FIFTH OPERATION: Conclusion of the Matter

The cards are to be again carefully shuffled by the enquirer but not cut. The diviner then takes the pack, and deals it card by card in rotation into ten answering to the Tree of Life. This refers to the rule of the ten Sephiroth in the celestial heavens. This being done, the diviner selects the packet containing the significator for reading, noting carefully under which Sephirah it falls, and taking this as a general indication in the matter. This packet is then spread out in a horseshoe form, and read in the usual way, counting from the significator and this time in the direction in which the face of the figure looks. The cards are finally paired together as in the previous operation. This completes the mode of divination called “the Opening of the Key.” I now give the conclusion of the example.

Example (Cont.)

We will suppose that the cards have been shuffled and dealt in the following manner into ten packets answering to the Sephiroth in the Tree of Life:

Fifth Operation—Tree of Life

The packet containing the significator falls under Binah, containing the third, thirteenth, twenty-third, thirty-third, forty-third, fifty-third, sixty-third, and seventy-third cards dealt. This is an argument of sadness and trial. The cards are spread as follows:

Fifth Operation—Example

The counting proceeds as follows: King of Cups—Star—Judgment—King of Cups again. Evil cards are in the majority, another argument of loss and trouble.

King of Cups	“He has hopes of thus re-establishing his fortunes and that a favourable result will ensue for him.”
Star
Judgment

The diviner then pairs them thus:

King of Cups	“He plunges therefore into speculation by which he loses heavily. (Seven of Pentacles is near Hanged Man).
Seven of Pentacles
Knave of Cups	“And his love affair comes to nothing.
Hanged Man
Star	“All his expectations are disappointed ...
Judgment
Knight of Pentacles	“... and his life for a time is arduous, petty, and uninteresting.”
Eight of Swords

(The coming of trouble is here shown by the Knight of Pentacles looking against the direction of the reading. If it were turned the other way it would show that his troubles were quitting him and that matters would improve.) This completes the operation, and shows the general development and result of the question.

Tabulated Rules

1. Shuffling, Cutting, Dealing, and Examining.

In shuffling, the mind of the enquirer should be earnestly fixed on the matter concerning which he desires information. If any cards fall in the process, they should be taken up without being noticed and the shuffling resumed. The shuffling being concluded and the pack placed upon the table, if any cards fall to the ground or become turned in a different direction, the shuffling should be done again.

A cut should be clean and decided. If any cards fall from the hand in the performance, the operation of shuffling should be repeated before they are again cut. In dealing, care should be taken not to invert the cards, and their relative order should be strictly observed. In examining a pack of cards, their relative order should be rigidly maintained, as without care in this respect, one may be easily pushed under or over another, which would of course have the effect of completely altering the counting in the reading.

2. Of the Selection of the Significator, and of the Complexion Assigned to the Court Cards.

Wands generally—fair and red-haired person.

Cups generally—moderately fair.

Swords generally—moderately dark.

Pentacles generally—very dark.

Kings—Men.

Queens—Women.

Princes—Young Men.

Princesses (Knives)—Young women.

Therefore the significators are to be thus selected. For example, a dark complexioned middle-aged man, King of Pentacles. A fair young woman, Princess (Knave) of Cups, etc.

In the actual reading of the cards, these descriptions can be modified by those which are on either side of them, thus: the Queen of Cups, which indicates a fair woman with golden brown hair, if between cards of the suits of swords and pentacles, would show a woman with rather dark brown hair and dark eyes. As before stated, the Princes and Queens almost invariably represent actual men and women connected with the subject in hand. But the Kings sometimes represent either the coming on or going off of a matter; arrival, or departure, according to the way in which they face. While the Princesses (Knives) show opinions, thoughts, or ideas, either in harmony with or opposed to the subject.

3. Of the General Signification of the Majority of a Particular Suit and of the Particular Signification of Either Three or Four Cards of a Sort in a Reading:

A majority of wands—energy, quarrelling, opposition.

A majority of cups—pleasure and merriment.

A majority of swords—trouble and sadness, sometimes sickness and even death.

A majority of pentacles—business, money, possessions, etc.

A majority of keys—forces of considerable strength, but beyond the enquirer's control.

A majority of court cards—society, meeting with many persons.

A majority of Aces—strength generally; the Aces are always strong cards.

Four Aces—great power and force.

Three Aces—riches and success.

Four Kings—great swiftness and rapidity.

Three Kings—unexpected meetings.

Kings generally—show news.

Four Queens generally—authority and influence.

Three Queens generally—powerful and influential friends.

Four Princes or Knights—meetings with the great.

Three Princes or Knights—rank and honour.

Four Princesses (Knives)—new ideas and plans.

Three Princesses (Knives)—society of the young.

Four Tens generally—anxiety and responsibility.

Three Tens generally—buying, selling, commercial transactions.

Four Nines generally—added responsibility.

Three Nines generally—much correspondence.
Four Eights generally—much news.
Three Eights generally—much journeying.
Four Sevens generally—disappointments.
Three Sevens generally—treaties and compacts.
Four Sixes generally—pleasure.
Three Sixes generally—gain and success.
Four Fives generally—order, regularity.
Three Fives generally—quarrels, fights.
Four Fours generally—rest and peace.
Three Fours generally—industry.
Four Threes generally—resolution and determination.
Three Threes generally—deceit.
Four Deuces generally—conference and conversations.
Three Deuces generally—reorganization and recommencement of a thing.
The keys are not noticed as above, by threes and fours.

4. Extra and Brief Meaning of the Thirty-six Smaller Cards.

WANDS

Deuce—Influence over another. Dominion.
Three—Pride and arrogance. Power sometimes.
Four—Settlement. Arrangement completed.
Five—Quarrelling. Fighting.
Six—Gain and success.
Seven—Opposition; sometimes courage therewith.
Eight—A hasty communication, letter or message. Swiftmess.
Nine—Strength. Power. Health. Energy.
Ten—Cruelty and malice towards others. Overbearing strength. Revenge.
Injustice.

CUPS

Deuce—Marriage, love, pleasure. Warm friendship.

Three—Plenty. Hospitality, eating, drinking. Pleasure, dancing, new clothes, and merriment.

Four—Receiving pleasures or kindness from others, yet some discomfort therewith.

Five—Disappointment in love. Marriage broken off, etc. Unkindness from friends. (Whether deserved or not is shown by the cards with it, or counting from or to it.) Loss of friendship.

Six—Wish, happiness, success, enjoyment.

Seven—Lying, deceit, promises unfulfilled, illusion, deception. Error, slight success, but not enough energy to retain it.

Eight—Success abandoned, decline of interest in a thing. Ennui.

Nine—Complete success. Pleasure and happiness. Wishes fulfilled.

Ten—Matters definitely arranged and settled in accordance with one's wishes. Complete good-fortune.

WORDS

Deuce—Quarrel made up, and arranged. Peace restored, yet some tension in relations.

Three—Unhappiness, sorrow, tears.

Four—Convalescence, recovery from sickness, change for the better.

Five—Defeat, loss, malice. Slander, evil-speaking.

Six—Labour, work; journey, probably by water. (Shown by cards nearby.)

Seven—In character untrustworthy, vacillation. Journey probably by land (shown by cards near, etc.).

Eight—Narrow or restricted. Petty. A prison.

Nine—Illness. Suffering. Malice. Cruelty. Pain.

Ten—Ruin. Death. Failure. Disaster.

PENTACLES

Deuce—Pleasant change. Visit to friends, etc.

Three—Business, paid employment. Commercial transactions.

Four—Gain of money and influence. A present.

Five—Loss of profession. Loss of money. Monetary anxiety.

Six—Success in material things; prosperity in business.

Seven—Unprofitable speculations, employments; also honorary work undertaken or the love of it, and without desire of reward.

Eight—Skill, prudence; also artfulness, and cunning. (Depends on cards with it.)

Nine—Inheritance. Much increase of money.

Ten—Riches and wealth.

5. Brief Meanings of the Twenty-two Keys.

0. Foolish Man. Idea, thought, spirituality, that which endeavours to rise above the material. (That is, if the subject which is enquired about be spiritual.) But if the divination be regarding a material event of ordinary life, this card is not good, and shows folly, stupidity, eccentricity, and even mania, unless with very good cards indeed. It is too ideal and unstable to be generally good in material things.

1. Magician or Juggler. Skill, wisdom, adaptation. Craft, cunning, etc., always depending on its dignity. Sometimes occult wisdom.

2. High Priestess. Change, alteration, increase and decrease. Fluctuation (whether for good or evil is again shown by cards connected with it.) Compare with Death and Moon.

3. Empress. Beauty, happiness, pleasure, success, also luxury and sometimes dissipation, but only if with very evil cards.

4. Emperor. War, conquest, victory, strife, ambition.

5. Hierophant. Divine wisdom. Manifestation. Explanation. Teaching. Differing from, though resembling in some respects, the meaning of the Magician, the Prophet, and the Lovers. Occult wisdom.

6. The Lovers. Inspiration (passive and in some cases mediumistic, thus differing from that of the Hierophant and Magician and Prophet). Motive, power, and action, arising from inspiration and impulse.

7. The Chariot. Triumph. Victory. Health. Success, though sometimes not stable and enduring.

8. Justice. Eternal justice and balance. Strength and force, but arrested as in the act of judgment. Compare with (11) Fortitude. Also, in combination with other cards, legal proceedings, a court of law, a trial at law, etc.

9. The Hermit, or Prophet. Wisdom sought for and obtained from above. Divine inspiration (but active as opposed to that of the Lovers). In the mystical titles, this with the Hierophant and the Magician are the Three Magi.

10. Wheel of Fortune. Good fortune and happiness (within bounds), but sometimes also a species of intoxication with success, if the cards near it bear this out.

11. Fortitude. (At one time (8) Justice and (11) Fortitude were transposed.) Courage, strength, fortitude. Power not arrested as in the act of judgment, but passing on to further action, sometimes obstinacy, etc. Compare with (8) Justice.

12. Hanged Man or Drowned Man. Enforced sacrifice. Punishment, Loss. Fatal and not voluntary. Suffering generally.

13. Death. Time. Ages. Transformation. Change involuntary as opposed to the Moon, XIX. Sometimes death and destruction, but rarely the latter, and the former only if it is borne out by the cards with it. Compare also with High Priestess.

14. Temperance. Combination of forces. Realization. Action (material). Effect either for good or evil.

15. Devil. Materiality. Material force. Material temptation; sometimes obsession, especially if associated with the Lovers.

16. Tower. Ambition, fighting, war, courage. Compare with Emperor. In certain combinations, destruction, danger, fall, ruin.

17. Star. Hope, faith, unexpected help. But sometimes also dreaminess, deceived hope, etc.

18. Moon. Dissatisfaction, voluntary change (as opposed to (13) Death). Error, lying, falsity, deception. (The whole according whether the card is well or ill-dignified, and on which it much depends.)

19. Sun. Glory, gain, riches. Sometimes also arrogance. Display, vanity, but only when with very evil cards.

20. Judgment. Final decision. Judgment. Sentence. Determination of a matter without appeal on its plane.

21. Universe. The matter itself. Synthesis. World. Kingdom. Usually denotes the actual subject of the question, and therefore depends entirely on the accompanying cards.

6. On the Signification of the Cards.

A card is strong or weak, well-dignified or ill-dignified, according to the cards which are next to it on either side. Cards of the same suit on either side strengthen it greatly either for good or evil, according to their nature. Cards of the suits answering to its contrary element, on either side, weaken it greatly for good or evil. Air and earth are contraries as also are fire and water. Air is friendly with water and fire, and fire with air and earth.

If a card of the suit of wands falls between a cup and a sword, the sword modifies and connects the wand with the cup, so that it is not weakened by its vicinity, but is modified by the influence of both cards; therefore fairly strong. But if a card passes between two which are naturally contrary, it is not affected by either much, as a wand between a sword and a pentacle which latter, being air and earth, are contrary and therefore weaken each other.

Here the question being of the wand, this card is not to be noticed as forming a link between the sword and pentacle.

A Few Examples Given by S.R.M.D.

9 10 5 Sw. Sw. Sw.	Very strong and potent in action. Very evil.
10 10 2 W. Sw. W.	Not quite so strong. Ruin checked and perhaps overcome.
6 10 10 C. Sw. C.	Rather good than otherwise. It is bounty overcoming loss, like a piquant sauce which adds to pleasure.
9 10 10 P. Sw. C.	Very weak, evil, slight loss in material things, but more anxiety than actual loss.
5 2 9 Sw. W. Sw.	Moderately strong. Rashness which brings evil in its train. Evil.
9 2 6 P. W. P.	Fairly strong. Good. Considerable gain and victory.
10 2 6 C. W. C.	Weak, evil. Victory which is perverted by debauchery and evil living. But other cards may mitigate the judgment.
9 10 5 Sw. C. Sw.	Medium strong. Evil. Sorrow arising from pleasure and through one's own pleasures.
9 10 6 P. C. P.	Perfect success and happiness.
10 10 5 W. C. Sw.	Rather evil. Pleasure that when obtained is not worth the trouble one has had in obtaining it.
10 6 9 Sw. C. P.	Fairly strong and good. The Sw. and P. being opposite elements counteract each other. Therefore is it as if they were not there.
10 6 10 Sw. C. W.	Fairly good. Some trouble, but trouble which is overcome. If Six of Cups were a bad card the evil would carry the day.
9 Death 3 Sw. Sw.	Death accompanied by much pain and misery.
9 9 High W. Sw. Priestess	Recovery from sickness.
6 Q. King Sw. W. P.	An active woman, courageous and reliable with dark chestnut hair, and open fearless expression.
7 King 5 C. C. Sw.	A rather fair man but very deceitful and malicious.

7. On Pairing the Cards Together in Reading.

On pairing the cards each is to be taken as of equal force with the other. If of opposite elements they mutually weaken each other. If at the end of the pairing of the cards in a packet, one card remains over, it signifies the partial result of that particular part of the divination only. If an evil card and the others good, it would modify the good.

If it be the significator of the enquirer, or of another person, it would show that matters would much depend on the line of action taken by the person represented. The reason of this importance of the single card is that it is alone, and not modified. If two cards are at the end instead of a single one, they are not of so much importance.

8. On the Exercise of Clairvoyance and Intuition.

The diviner should, in describing any person from a significator in the actual reading, endeavour, by clairvoyance and using the card in question as a symbol, to see the person implied using the rules to aid, and restrict, his vision. In describing an event from the cards in the reading, he should employ his intuition in the same manner. Personal descriptions are modified by the cards next them; e.g., the Knave of Wands represents usually a very fair girl, but if between cards of the suit of pentacles, she might be even quite dark, though the wands would still give a certain brightness to hair, eyes, and complexion.

9. On Counting in the Reading.

In all cases of counting from the card last touched, the card itself is one, that next it is two, and so on.

From every Ace—five is counted.

From every Princess (Knave)—seven is counted.

From every other court card—four is counted.

From every small card—the number of its pips.

From every key answering to an element—three is counted.

From every key answering to a sign—twelve is counted.
From every key answering to a planet—nine is counted.

3. Note by JMG: In the original documents, a special form of the crux ansata related to the tarot was included here. See color insert page 15.
4. Note by Regardie: The Hebrew spellings of these angelic names are provided in Book One, with the preliminary knowledge material.
5. Note by JMG: Marplot, a character in Susannah Centlivre's 1709 play The Busy Body, became a proverbial figure in nineteenth-century English writing.
6. Note by Regardie: A formula which may be found useful to assist concentration, and to formulate a link between the diviner and the intelligences referred to in the tarot, is to take the pack in the left hand, and with the right hand hold the wand or any lesser instrument. Then say: "In the divine name I.A.O., I invoke thee thou great angel HRU who art set over the operations of this secret wisdom. Lay thine hand invisibly on these consecrated cards of art, that thereby I may obtain true knowledge of hidden things, to the glory of the ineffable name. Amen."
7. Note by Regardie: If the matter be important, he should wait twelve hours before reshuffling.
8. Note by JMG: Note that in the rest of the example, despite what this paragraph says, the King of Cups rather than the Prince is treated as the significator.
9. Note by S.A., that is, William Wynn Westcott: Very careful here.
10. Note by S.A.: Or behind.

Unofficial: THE TAROT TRUMPS

By G.H. Soror, Q.L.¹¹

The cards of the Lesser Arcana present to us the vibrations of number, colour, and element—that is, the plane on which number and colour function. Thus, in the Ten of Pentacles we have the number ten and tertiary colours—citrine, olive, and russet—working in Malkuth, the material plane. Whereas in the Ten of Wands we have the number ten and the tertiaries working in pure energy. In these cards, the Sephirah is indicated by the colouring of the clouds; the plane by the colouring of the symbols.

The four honours of each suit taken in their most abstract sense may be interpreted as:

Potential power.....the King
Brooding power.....the Queen
Power in action.....the Prince
Reception and transmission.....the Princess

All these cards are coloured according to their elements plus the Sephirah to which they are attributed. With the Greater Arcana, the Trumps, however, we are given the keys to divine manifestation, each one an individual force to be considered independently. It must never be forgotten that the Trumps are, intrinsically, glyphs of cosmic, not human, forces.

0. The Foolish Man. This card as usually presented shows a man in motley striding along, heedless of the dog which tears his garments and threatens to attack him. In this is seen only the lower aspect of the card, giving no hint to the divine folly of which St. Paul speaks. But in the Order pack, an effort is made to reveal the deeper meaning. A naked child stands beneath a rose tree bearing yellow roses—the golden rose of joy as well as the rose of silence. While reaching up to the roses, he yet holds in leash a grey wolf, worldly wisdom held in check by perfect innocence. The colours are pale yellow, pale blue, greenish yellow—suggestive of the early dawn of a spring day.

I. The Magician. It represents the union and balance of the elemental powers controlled by mind. The adept dedicating the minor implements on the altar. The paths of Beth and Mercury link Kether the Crown with Binah, the Aimah Elohim. The Magician, therefore, is reflected in the intellect which stores and gathers up knowledge and pours it into the House of Life, Binah. The number of the path, twelve, suggests the synthesis of the zodiac, as Mercury is the synthesis of the planets. The colours yellow, violet, grey, and indigo, point to the mysterious astral light surrounding the great adept. It is a card linked with the name Tahuti and Hermes as the previous one is with Krishna and Harparkrat or Dionysius.

II. The High Priestess. The High Priestess rules the long path uniting Kether to Tiphareth, crossing the reciprocal paths of Venus and Leo. She is the great feminine force controlling the very source of life, gathering into herself all the energizing forces and holding them in solution until the time of release. Her colours—pale blue, deepening into sky blue, silvery white, and silver, relieved by touches of orange and flame—carry out these ideas.

III. The Empress. She is an aspect of Isis; the creative and positive side of nature is suggested here. The Egyptian trilogy, Isis, Hathor, and Nephthys, symbolized by the crescent, full moon, and gibbous moon are represented in the tarot by the High Priestess, Hathor. The Empress, Isis, takes either the crescent moon or Venus as her symbol. Justice, Nephthys, takes the gibbous moon.

Isis and Venus gives the aspect of Love, while Hathor is rather the Mystic, the full moon reflecting the sun of Tiphareth while in Yesod, transmitting the rays of the sun in her path Gimel. In interpreting a practical tarot it is often admissible to regard the Empress as standing for occultism and the High Priestess for religion, the church as distinguished from the Order.

The Empress, whose letter is Daleth, is the door of the inner mysteries, as Venus is the door of the Vault. Her colours are emerald, sky-blue, blue-green, and cerise or rose-pink.

IV. The Emperor. Here we have the great energizing forces as indicated by the varying shades of red. It may be noted here that the red paths remain red in all planes, varying only in shade. Thus Aries, the Emperor, the pioneer, the general, is blood and deep crimson, red, pure vermillion, or flowing fiery red. He is Ho Nike, the conqueror, hot, passionate, impetuous, the apotheosis of Mars, whether in love or in war. He is the positive masculine as the Empress is the positive feminine.

V. Hierophant. The High Priest is the counterpart of the High Priestess. As Aries is the house of Mars and the exaltation of the sun, so Taurus is the house of Venus and the exaltation of the moon. He is the reflective or mystical aspect of the masculine. He is the thinker as the Emperor is the doer.

His colours, unlike those of the Emperor, vary considerably. Red, orange, maroon, deep brown, and chestnut brown, suggest veiled thought, interior power, endurance, contemplation, and reconciliation. This card frequently indicates the hidden guardianship of the Masters.

VI. The Lovers. The impact of inspiration on intuition, resulting in illumination and liberation—the sword striking off the fetters of habit and materialism, Perseus rescuing Andromeda from the dragon of fear and the waters of stagnation.¹²

The colours are orange, violet, purplish grey, and pearl grey. The flashing colour of orange gives deep vivid blue, while the flashing colour for violet is golden yellow. The flashing colours may always be introduced if they bring out the essential colour meaning more clearly. In practise this card usually signifies sympathetic understanding.

VII. The Chariot. Here we have a symbol of the spirit of man controlling the lower principles, soul and body, and thus passing triumphantly through the astral plane, rising above the clouds of illusion and penetrating to the higher spheres.

The colours amber, silver-grey, blue-grey, and the deep blue-violet of the night sky elucidate this symbol. It is the sublimation of the psyche.

VIII. Strength. This also represents the mastery of the lower by the higher. But in this case it is the soul which holds in check the passions, although her feet are still planted on earth, and the dark veil still floats about her head and clings around her. The colours—pale greenish yellow, black, yellowish grey, and reddish amber—suggest the steadfast endurance and fortitude required, but the deep red rose which is the flashing colour to the greenish yellow, gives the motive power.

IX. The Hermit. Prudence. These three trumps should be collated in studying them for they represent the three stages of initiation. The man wrapped in hood and mantle and carrying a lantern to illuminate the path and a staff to support his footsteps. He is the eternal seeker, the pilgrim soul. His hood and mantle are the brown of earth, and above him is the night sky. But the delicate yellow-greens and bluish greens of spring are about him, and spring is in his heart.

X. Wheel of Fortune. In the Etz Chayim, or the Tree of Life, the Wheel is placed on the Pillar of Mercy, where it forms the principal column linking Netzach to Chesed, victory to mercy. It is the revolution of experience and progress, the steps of the zodiac, the revolving staircase, held in place by the counterchanging influence of light and darkness, time and eternity—presided over by the Plutonian cynocephalus below, and the sphinx of Egypt above, the eternal riddle which can only be solved when we attain liberation. The basic colours of this Trump are blue, violet, deep purple, and blue irradiated by yellow. But the zodiacal spokes of the wheel should be in the colours of the spectrum, while the Ape is in those of Malkuth, and the Sphinx in the primary colours and black.

XI. Justice. Nephthys, the third aspect of Luna, the twin sister of Isis. Justice as distinguished from love. Her emblems are the sword and the scales. Like her sister, she is clothed in green, but in a sharper colder green than the pure emerald of Isis. Her subsidiary colours are blue, blue-green, pale green. It is only by utilizing the flashing colours that we can find the hidden warmth and steadfastness.

XII. The Hanged Man. An elusive, because a profoundly significant symbol. It is sacrifice—the submergence of the higher in the lower in order to sublimate the lower. It is the descent of the spirit into matter, the incarnation of God in man, the submission to the bonds of matter that the material may be transcended and transmuted. The colours are deep blue, white and black intermingled but not merged, olive, green, and greenish fawn.

XIII. Death. The sign of transmutation and disintegration. The skeleton, which alone survives the destructive power of time, may be regarded as the foundation upon which the structure is built, the type which persists through the permutations of time and space, adaptable to the requirements of evolution and yet radically unchanged; the transmuting power of nature working from below upwards, as the Hanged Man is the transmuting power of the spirit working from above downwards. The colours are blue-green, both dark and pale, the two dominant colours of the visible world, and the flashing colours of orange and red-orange.

XIV. Temperance. This is the equilibrium not of the balance of Libra but of the impetus of the arrow, Sagittarius, which cleaves its way through the air by the force imparted to it by the taut string of the bow. It requires the counterchanged forces of fire and water, Shin and Qoph, held by the restraining power of Saturn, and concentrated by the energies of Mars to initiate this impetus. All these are summed up in the symbolism of the figure standing between earth and water, holding the two amphorae with their streams of living water, and with the volcano in the background. The colours are bright-blue, blue-grey, slate-blue, and lilac-grey.

XV. The Devil. This card should be studied in conjunction with number thirteen. They are the two great controlling forces of the universe, the centrifugal and the centripetal, destructive and reproductive, dynamic and static. The lower nature of man fears and hates the transmuting process, hence the chains binding the lesser figures and the bestial forms of their lower limbs. Yet this very fear of change and disintegration is necessary to stabilize the life force and preserve continuity. The colours are indigo, livid brown, golden brown, and grey.

XVI. The Tower. As always red remains persistent throughout the four planes, although modified in tone. Thus we find vivid scarlet shading into deep sombre red and vermillion shot with amber. The contrasting shades of green serve to throw the red into relief. The tremendous destructive influence of the lightning, rending asunder established forms to make way for new forms to emerge, revolution as distinguished from transmutation or sublimation, the destructive as opposed to the conservative, energy attacking inertia, the impetuous ejection of those who would enclose themselves in the walls of ease and tradition.

XVII. The Star. This shows the seven-pointed star of Venus shining above the waters of Aquarius, the guiding force of love in all its forms and aspects, illuminating the soul during her immersion in humanity, so that the bonds of Saturn are dissolved in the purified waters of baptism. The dove of the Spirit hovers above the Tree of Knowledge giving the promise of ultimate attainment—and on the other side gleams of the Tree of Life.

Pale colours suggest dawn and the morning star—amethyst, pale grey, fawn, dove colour, and white, with the pale yellow of the star.

XVIII. The Moon. Here also is a river but it is the troubled waters of night, wherein is to be described a crayfish, counterpart of the scarabeus. From the water's edge winds the dark path of toil, effort, and possible failure. It is guarded by the threatening watchdogs, seeking to intimidate the wayfarers, while in the distance the barren hills are surmounted by the frowning fortresses still further guarding the way to attainment. It is the path of blood and tears in which fear, weakness, and fluctuation must be overcome. The colours are dark crimson, reddish brown, brownish crimson, and plum colours, but their sombre hues are lightened by the translucent faint greens and yellows to be found in their counterparts.

XIX. The Sun. The watery paths of trial and probation are counterbalanced by the fiery paths of temptation, judgment, and decision. In violent contrast to the sombre colouring of Aquarius and Pisces, we are confronted by the flaring hues of the sun and fire. The too-aspiring Icarus may find his waxen wings of ambition and curiosity shrivelled and melted by the fiery rays of the sun and the heat of fire, but approached with humility and reverence, the sun becomes the beneficent source of life.

Protected by an enclosing wall, standing by the waters of repentance, the pilgrim may submit himself humbly but without fear to the searching light and absorb warmth and vitality from it for the struggle before him. The colours are clear-orange, golden-yellow, amber shot with red, and the contrasting blue and purple.

XX. The Last Judgment. The three trumps attributed to the elemental paths are perhaps the most difficult to understand. They represent the action of forces exterior to the experience of humanity, not the influence of environment but the impact of the supernals upon the sublunary.

In the air, we have pure spirit holding in leash the lust of the flesh. In water, the sublimating power of sacrifice. Here in fire, we are shown the cosmic forces concentrating on the pilgrim from all sides. Judgment is pronounced upon him. He is not the judge nor does decision rest in his hands. Lazarus cannot emerge from the sepulchre until the voice cries out, "Come forth!" Nor can he cast aside the conflicting grave-clothes until the command, "Loose him!" is given. Man of himself is helpless. The impulse to ascend must come from above, but by its power he may transcend the sepulchre of environment and cast aside the trammels of desire. Here once more, the fiery energy of red burns through the planes. Fiery scarlet, glowing crimson, burning red are emphasized by the passive greens.

XXI. The Universe. Observe that this represents not the world but the universe. It should be remembered that to the ancients, Saturn represented the confines of the solar system. They had no means of measuring either Uranus or Neptune. To them, therefore, Saturn passing through the spiral path of the zodiac, marked at its cardinal points by the symbols of the Kerubim forming the cross, was a comprehensive glyph of the whole.

Thus, in this card we find a synthesis of the whole Taro or Rota. The central figure should be taken as Hathor, Athor, or Ator, rather than Isis, thus indicating the hidden anagram which may perhaps be translated thus: ORAT—man prays. ATOR—to the Great Mother. TARO—who turns. ROTA—the wheel of life and death.

The colours like those of the Wheel of Fortune include the colours of the spectrum and those of the elements, but they are placed against the indigo and black of Saturn, with the white gleam of the stars shining in the darkness and the misty figure of the Aimah Elohim in the midst. In the practical tarot, this card is taken to signify the matter in hand, that is the subject of any question that has been asked.

Having now revised the twenty-two Atouts or Trumps in succession, it will be wise for the student to reverse the process and seek to follow the path of the pilgrim from below upwards, thus seeking to comprehend the interior process of initiation and illumination. It is a process in which the whole universe does not disdain to take part, for man is himself the microcosm of the macrocosm and the child of the gods. And again, the macrocosm must itself be undergoing a corresponding process in which the experience not only of humanity but of each individual must be an integral part. The fragments are gathered up into the baskets, that nothing may be lost; and from the feeding of the multitude there remains not less but more than the unbroken bread and fish—fit emblems of earth and water.

Cease not to seek day and night the purifying mysteries.¹³

11. Note by JMG: Soror Quaestor Lucis, that is, Harriet Felkin.
12. Note by Regardie: Incidentally note that this is the design of the Order card. Andromeda is shown manacled to a rock, the dragon rising from the waters at her feet. Perseus is depicted flying through the air to her assistance, with unsheathed sword. The design is wholly different from that of the Waite pack.
13. Note by Regardie: This paper on the Trumps is not an official document. It should be conceived rather in the nature of a so-called Side Lecture or Flying Roll. That is not to say that it is unimportant, or that there is little of interest therein. On the contrary, certain aspects of this interpretation are not without high significance. Moreover, it should be carefully studied as well as the preceding official tarot instructions in conjunction with the description of certain of the Trumps in the grade rituals of the First Order.

THE TREE OF LIFE AS PROJECTED IN A SOLID SPHERE

Note by S.R.M.D.

The planets' sphere which illustrates this manuscript, a part of the Z.A.M.'s Abstract of the Tarot, has been drawn by S.R.M.D. as instructed. It represents the heavens polarized on the plane of the ecliptic, not on the plane of the equator of our Earth, so that its north pole is the veritable north pole of our heavens and not merely that part of them to which the North Pole of our Earth now points.

Another very important difference is that, throughout the true tarot, the teaching assigns the commencing point of the zodiac to the bright star Regulus, which is in Leo. And it measures right ascension and longitude from that point, and not from a suppositious point divided by the equinox and called the 0° of Aries (though in reality now far removed from the constellation of that name), which has been adopted by modern or Western astronomy and astrology.

By this now usual way of reckoning, and the precession of the equinoxes, it has gradually come to pass that the signs (or divisions, each of 30°, of the zodiac) no longer coincide with the constellations of the same name, and each decade of years shows them slowly but surely receding.

But the tarot method of reckoning from the star named Regulus has, it will be seen, the effect of making the signs and the constellations coincide.

Regulus is also named Cor Leonis—"the Heart of the Lion." Regulus means "Star of the Prince." Regulus coincides with the position of the heart in the figure of Leo upon the star maps.

Note by Regardie: The principia or fundamental ideas of this astronomical view of the tarot may be found, at least in its essential form, in the astronomical writings of Claudius Ptolemy of Alexandria. Naturally, this reference only concerns the signs, constellations, and other astronomical divisions noted. The expansion of this scheme, and its allocation to other forms of universal symbolism, such as the tarot cards, Hebrew letters, and Enochian tablets, has its roots in the synthetic genius of the Golden Dawn. The idea of projecting the Tree of Life into a solid sphere, having application among other things to the starry heavens and the constellations, certainly is peculiar to this system alone. Most of the fundamentals inhering in the other aspects of the Golden Dawn teaching may be found in exoteric occult literature of past centuries. But, as again I must insist, the peculiar practical application of them as exemplified in the Golden Dawn routine can nowhere else be found, save, of course, in other authentic esoteric systems. The student is urged to study this whole section very thoroughly; it is well worth it. In the early days of the Order there was a special group which devoted its time and energies to the study and application of the principles involved herein. Incidentally, may I point out how much light this particular instruction throws on innumerable passages in Blavatsky's Secret Doctrine—especially in Volume II.

Tabular View of the Dominion of the Symbols of Book “T” in the Celestial Heavens, and of the Operation and Rule of the Tree of Life in the same as Projected on a Solid Sphere.

(Abridged Treatise arranged for the use of the Z.A.M.'s in Anglia by S.R.M.D.)

The Zelator Adeptus Minor shall know that the great “King Star” or “Heart of the Lion,” which is in Leo upon the path of the ecliptic and one of the “four Tiphareth points” (see later) of the celestial heavens, is the commencement and ruler of all our reckoning of longitude (or ecliptic). The path of the sun itself is the commencement of our reckoning of the latitude in the searching out of our hidden wisdom.

Also the dragon, the constellation Draco, surroundeth the pole Kether of our celestial heavens.

But the northern pole and Kether of the material planet (even of our Erthe, Earth) looketh constantly unto Binah, for as much as she is under sorrow and suffering. When, oh Lord of the Universe, shall she turn from her evil ways so that she shall again behold Kether? Wherefore she is now a place of trial. For each thing in this world of Assiah looketh towards that which is its natural governor, and to what part of the celestial heavens the Kether of a planet constantly looketh, by that part is that planet ruled. For in all things shine the Sephiroth even as hath been sufficiently said.

The Four Knaves (Princesses) rule the celestial heavens from the north pole of the zodiac to the 45° of latitude north of the ecliptic. They form the thrones of the Four Aces, who rule in Kether. The four Kings, four Queens, and four Princes rule the celestial heavens from the 45° of north latitude down to the ecliptic. The twelve tarot keys attributed to the twelve signs of the zodiac rule the celestial heavens from the ecliptic, down to the 45° of south latitude. The thirty-six smaller cards of the suits (from two to ten) rule the celestial heavens from the 45° south of the ecliptic to the south pole, or the Malkuth place therein. And all calculation arises from the star Regulus, the 0° of our Leo.

Northern Hemisphere

Symbols

These four revolve in Kether, their thrones are the central portion (of 45° of longitude in extent) in the dominions of the Knaves of their respective suits.

Star Groups corresponding to above

1. A part of the tail of Draco, forefeet of Ursa Major, tail of Ursa Major, and of the northern dog of Canes Venatici.

2. Head of Draco, body and legs of Hercules.

3. Body of Draco. Right arm of Cepheus, head and body of Lacerta. Body of Cygnus.

4. Body of Draco. Legs of Cepheus. Tail of Ursa Minor and the Pole Star. Legs of Cassiopeia. Head and neck of Camelopardus.

8. Princess (Knave) of Wands. Rules from north pole to 45° and from 0° of Cancer to 30° of Virgo, the end of Virgo. The throne of the Ace of Wands extends 45° from $22^\circ30'$ of Cancer to $7^\circ30'$ of Virgo within the limits of 45° latitude.

Star groups corresponding to above. Tail of Draco. Head and forepart of Ursa Minor, left arm and part of head and chest of Bootes. The greater part of the northernmost dog of Canes Venatici. Tail and back of Ursa Major, (its ancient Italian name was Septemtriones, the Seven Ploughing Oxen). This includes the celebrated seven stars of the constellation called “Charles’s Wain” by the English; “Seven Rishis” by the Hindus, and in the Egyptian Book of the Dead, Ch. XVII, “The seven bright ones who follow their lord, the thigh of the northern heaven.” ¹⁴

12. Princess (Knave) of Cups. Rules from north pole to 45° of latitude and from 0° of Libra to 30° of Sagittarius in longitude. The throne of the Ace embraces from $22^\circ30'$ of Libra to $7^\circ30'$ of Sagittarius within the above limits of latitude.

Star Group. Head of Draco. Left arm, body, and legs of Hercules, part of head, right shoulder, and club of Bootes.

16. Princess (Knave) of Swords. Rules from north pole to 45° latitude and from 0° of Capricorn to 30° of Pisces longitude. The throne of the Ace extends from $22^\circ30'$ of Capricorn to $7^\circ30'$ of Pisces as before.

Star Group. Body of Draco, part of Lyra. Head, body, and right arm of Cepheus, the king and father of Andromeda, the whole of Cygnus, head and body of Lacerta, back and part of head of Vulpecula the Fox.

20. Princess (Knave) of Pentacles. Rules from north pole to 45° latitude, and from 0° of Aries to 30° of Gemini longitude. The throne of the Ace embraces from $22^\circ30'$ of Aries to $7^\circ30'$ of Gemini within the latitude as above.

Star Group. Body of Draco, legs and part of right arm, and sceptre of Cepheus, tail and hind quarters of Ursa Minor, with the pole star of our Earth, head and neck of Camelopardalis (giraffe), body and right arm, throne and legs of Cassiopeia, the queen of Cepheus and mother of Andromeda, head of Ursa Major.

7. Prince of Wands. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° Cancer to 20° Leo in longitude.

Star Group. Head, body, and tail of Leo, body and tail of Leo Minor, hind quarters and legs of Ursa Major, head and forequarters of southern dog of Canes Venatici.

17. King of Pentacles. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° of Leo to 20° of Virgo.

Star Group. Head and body of Virgo, left arm of Bootes, hair of Berenice. Body and hind quarters of southern dog of Canes Venatici, hind feet of northern dog of Canes Venatici.

14. Queen of Swords. Rules from ecliptic to 45° and from 20° of Virgo to 20° of Libra.

Star Group. Right leg of Virgo, body and right arm, and right leg of Bootes. Beam and part of scales of Libra.

11. Prince of Cups. Rules from ecliptic to 45° and from 20° of Libra to 20° of Scorpio.

Star Group. Part of scales of Libra, left claws of Scorpio, body and legs of Ophiuchus, the holder of the Serpent. Front half of Serpent's head, right arm and club of Hercules.

5. The King of Wands. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° of Scorpio to 20° of Sagittarius.

Star Group. Top of head and bow of Sagittarius, head and right arm of Ophiuchus, near half of Serpent.

18. Queen of Pentacles. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° of Sagittarius to 20° of Capricorn.

Star Group. Top of head, neck, and horns of Capricorn, left hand of Aquarius, the man who carries the water, the whole of Aquila, the eagle, the greater part of Delphinus, whole of Sagitta the arrow, forefeet and body of Vulpecula the fox, and the tail of the Cygnet which he seizes.

15. Prince of Swords. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude, and from 20° of Capricorn to 20° of Aquarius.

Star Group. Tail of Capricornus, head and body of Aquarius, head and forelegs of Pegasus, the winged horse who sprang from the blood of Medusa, near the sources of the ocean, the whole of Equuleus, the lesser horse, part of head of Dolphin, tail and hind quarters of Vulpecula, part of wing of Cygnus, the swan, part of head of Pisces.

9. King of Cups. Rules from ecliptic to 45° of north latitude and from 20° of Aquarius to 20° of Pisces.

Star Group. Body and tail of one of the Pisces, and part of the band. Body and wings of Pegasus, head and arms of Andromeda, chained to the rock-tail of Lacerta.

6. Queen of Wands. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° of Pisces to 20° of Aries.

Star Group. The other fish and part of band of Pisces, head and back of Aries, body and legs of Andromeda, the Triangle, hand and left arm of Cassiopeia, the winged instep of Aries.

19. Prince of Pentacles. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° of Aries to 20° of Taurus.

Star Group. Tail of Aries, one horn and shoulder and back of Taurus, whole of Perseus, and the head of Medusa, hind quarters and legs of Camelopardalis, left leg of Auriga, the charioteer, and part of Capella, the she-goat which bears kids in her arms.

13. King of Swords. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude from 20° of Taurus to 20° Gemini in longitude.

Star Group. Head and body of Castor, one of the Gemini, greater part of Auriga and Capella, head and forepart of Lynx, forefeet of Camelopardalis.

10. Queen of Cups. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude, and from 20° Gemini to 20° of Cancer in longitude.

Star Group. Head and body of Pollux, the other of the Gemini; greater part of Cancer, the crab; face of Leo; head and face of Ursa Major.

The Following Twelve Keys Govern the Celestial Heavens from the Ecliptic to 45° of South Latitude

65. Fortitude. Rules the whole of Leo, from the point of Regulus or Cor Leonis.

Stars. The forelegs and hindfeet of Leo, greater part of the Sextans and of Crater, the cups, part of the body of Hydra, the great water serpent, greater part of Antlia Pneumatica, the air pump, greater part of Pyxis Nautica, a small part of the ship Argo.

66. Hermit or Prophet. Rules the whole of Virgo.

Stars. Left arm, hand, and arm of Virgo, and her ear of corn; part of the body of Hydra, Corvus the crow, part of Crater, tail and right hand of Centaurus, the man-horse, small part of Air-Pump and of Argo.

68. Justice. Rules the whole of Libra.

Stars. Part of the south scale of Libra, tail of Hydra, head, body, arms, and forefeet of Centaurus. Legs, body, and tail of Lupus, the wolf which he is killing. Right claw of Scorpio.

70. Death. Rules the whole of Scorpio.

Stars. Body and tail of Scorpio, head and neck of Lupus, whole of Ara—the Altar, two feet of Ophiuchus, point of arrow of Sagittarius, part of Norma, Mason's square.

71. Temperance. Rules the whole of Sagittarius.

Stars. The whole of Sagittarius, the archer, except right hind leg, the tail, the crown of the head, extreme points of bow and arrow, Corona Australis, Telescope, Pavo—the peacock.

72. The Devil. Rules the whole of Capricorn.

Stars. Whole lower half of Capricornus, the he-goat, part of Piscis Australis, the southern fish, Microscope, part of Grus the crane. Part of Indus.

74. The Star. Rules the whole of Aquarius.

Stars. Legs of Aquarius, and the issuant water head of Piscis Australis, part of Grus, part of Phoenix, part of Apparatus Sculptorum, part of Cetus.

75. The Moon. Rules the whole of Pisces.

Stars. The connecting band of Pisces, the body of Cetus, the sea monster to which Andromeda was exposed, part of Apparatus Sculptorum. Part of Phoenix, part of Fornax.

61. The Emperor. Rules the whole of Aries.

Stars. Legs of Aries, part of body of Taurus, head and forepart of Cetus, part of Fornax and of Eridanus.

62. The Hierophant. Rules the whole of Taurus.

Stars. Head and forepart of Taurus the bull. The bull sent by Neptune to frighten the horses of Sol and those of Hippolytus. The greater part of Orion the giant and hunter. The beginning of the river Eridanus into which Phaeton was hurled when attempting to drive the horses of the sun; greater part of Lepus, the Hare.

63. The Lovers. Rule the whole of Gemini.

Stars. Legs of Castor and Pollux, the Gemini, Canis Minor, a small part of Cancer. The whole of Monoceros, the unicorn, except the hindquarters. Head and forepart of Canis Major, the greater dog.

64. The Chariot. Rules the whole of Cancer up to Regulus in Leo.

Stars. One claw and part of the body of Cancer, forepaws of Leo, head and part of Hydra, part of Sextans, part of Pyxis Nautica, hind legs and tail of Monoceros, part of the mast, rigging, and prow of the ship Argo.

Note: The keys answering unto the seven lords who wander (planets) and the three spirits (the elements) are not assigned any fixed dominion. The following thirty-six small cards (Twos to Tens) rule the decans of the signs in the celestial heavens and their dominion extendeth from 45° south of the ecliptic unto Malkuth at the southern pole.

21	Five of Wands	0°–10° of ♄	♄	Part of Argo, part of Piscis Volans.
22	Six of Wands	10°–20° of ♄	♄	Part of Argo, part of Piscis Volans.
23	Seven of Wands	20°–30° of ♄	♂	Part of Argo, part of Piscis Volans.
24	Eight of Pentacles	0°–10° of ♄	♂	Part of Argo, part of Piscis Volans.
25	Nine of Pentacles	10°–20° of ♄	♀	Hind feet of Centaurus, part of Piscis Volans.
26	Ten of Pentacles	20°–30° of ♄	♀	Hind legs of Centaurus, part of Chameleon.
27	Two of Swords	0°–10° of ♄	♂	Hind legs of Centaurus, part of Crux, part of Musca and Chameleon.
28	Three of Swords	10°–20° of ♄	♄	Part of Crux, Musca, and Chameleon.
29	Four of Swords	20°–30° of ♄	♄	Part of Musca, Circinus, Compasses, and Chameleon.
30	Five of Cups	0°–10° of ♄	♂	Part of Circinus, Chameleon and of Triangulum Australe.
31	Six of Cups	10°–20° of ♄	♂	Part of Triangulum Australe, Apus the Swallow, and Octans.
32	Seven of Cups	20°–30° of ♄	♀	Part of Pavo, Apus, Octans.
33	Eight of Wands	0°–10° of ♄	♀	Part of Pavo, Apus, Octans.
34	Nine of Wands	10°–20° of ♄	♂	Part of Pavo, Apus, Octans.
35	Ten of Wands	20°–30° of ♄	♄	Part of Pavo, part of Hydra the water snake.
36	Two of Pentacles	0°–10° of ♄	♄	Part of Pavo, part of Hydra.
37	Three of Pentacles	10°–20° of ♄	♂	Part of Toucan, part of Hydra.

38	Four of Pentacles	20°–30° of ♄	☉	Part of Toucan, part of Phoenix.
39	Five of Swords	0°–10° of ♄	♀	Part of Phoenix, end of Eridanus.
40	Six of Swords	10°–20° of ♄	♂	Parts of Hydrus, Reticulum, and Rhombus.
41	Seven of Swords	20°–30° of ♄	♂	Parts of Phoenix, Hydra, Reticulum, and Eridanus.
42	Eight of Cups	0°–10° of ♃	♂	Parts of Phoenix, Eridanus, and Reticulum.
43	Nine of Cups	10°–20° of ♃	♂	Parts of Phoenix, Eridanus, and Reticulum.
44	Ten of Cups	20°–30° of ♃	♂	Parts of Phoenix, Dorado, and Reticulum.
45	Two of Wands	0°–10° of ♃	♂	Parts of Phoenix and Dorado.
46	Three of Wands	10°–20° of ♃	☉	Parts of Caelum Sculptoris and Dorado.
47	Four of Wands	20°–30° of ♃	♀	Part of Caelum Sculptoris (Engraver's Burin).
48	Five of Pentacles	0°–10° of ♄	♂	Part Eridanus, Columba Noae, Dorado, Equuleus Pictoris.
49	Six of Pentacles	10°–20° of ♄	♂	Forepart of Lepus, tail and wing of Columba, part of Equuleus.
50	Seven of Pentacles	20°–30° of ♄	♂	Part Equuleus and Lepus, body of Columba.
51	Eight of Swords	0°–10° of ♄	♂	Feet of Canis Major, prow of Argo, part of Equuleus Pictoris.
52	Nine of Swords	10°–20° of ♄	♂	Legs of Canis Major. Part of prow of Argo.
53	Ten of Swords	20°–30° of ♄	☉	Hind quarters of Canis Major, part of prow of Argo.
54	Two of Cups	0°–10° of ♃	♀	Prow of Argo. Tail of Canis Major.
55	Three of Cups	10°–20° of ♃	♂	Prow of Argo.
56	Four of Cups	20°–30° of ♃	♂	Prow of Argo. ¹⁵

Recapitulation

In the dominion of the various forces, the rule of each may be divided into three portions. The centre is the most pronounced in its accord with the nature of its ruler, and the two outer portions are tinged with the nature of the ruler of the dominion bordering thereon. For example, in the case of Leo, the dominion of Fortitude, the central ten degrees will have most of this nature. For the beginning ten degrees are tinged with the nature of Cancer, and the last ten degrees with the nature of Virgo, the nature of Leo however predominating the mixture.

The whole heavens, then, are thus divided into four great belts or zones:

The uppermost being the dominion of the Knave like a cross within a circle.

The second belt under the dominion of the other court cards represents a belt of influence descending vertically.

The third belt under the dominion of the twelve keys related to the signs of the zodiac, represents a belt of influence acting horizontally. This zone in union with the second belt will therefore yield a great zone of twelve crosses encircling the heavens.

The fourth belt consists of thirty-six decans under the dominion of the thirty-six small cards of the four suits, the numbers two through ten of each suit. In each of these sets of three parts of a sign, the central one will be more pronounced in effect than the lateral parts.

Therefore the three decanates of each of the signs will be symbolized by a triangle. Thus are yielded twelve triangles surrounding the lower heavens, and therefore there will ultimate twelve crosses surmounting twelve triangles surrounding the heavens. In other words, the symbol of the G.D. in the Outer, twelve times repeated.

And the central rising sun will represent the hidden influence of Tiphareth in the centre of the sphere, as will be hereafter explained, rising above the waters of space (the ethereal expanse of the sky called by the Egyptians “the waters of Nu which are the parents of the gods,” the shoreless ocean of space).

But in the Golden Dawn initiation, the cross surmounting the triangle is preferably represented by a Calvary Cross of six squares, as still more allied to Tiphareth.

Of the Operation and Rule of the Tree of Life in the Celestial Heavens Projected as if in a Solid Sphere

When the Tree of Life is considered not as being a plane but as a solid figure, and when it is projected in the sphere, the north pole of the sphere will coincide with Kether and the south pole with Malkuth.

And as we have before sufficiently learned the ten Sephiroth are repeated not alone, in each whole figure, but also in the parts therefore, so that every material thing created will have its own Sephiroth and paths.

Now as the north pole corresponds with Kether and the south pole corresponds with Malkuth, the central pillar of the Sephirotic Tree will form the invisible axis of the sphere, the central point coinciding with Tiphareth. This latter Sephirah together with that of Yesod will be completely hidden from view, so that Tiphareth will be the exact centre of the sphere.

Also the Sephiroth Chokmah, Binah, Chesed, Geburah, Netzach, and Hod will be duplicated. As also the paths Aleph, Beth, Gimel, Vau, Cheth, Caph, Mem, Qoph, and Shin, and so many of the others will be even quadrupled. But although Tiphareth and Yesod will be concealed, there will be four especial points where the influence of each will be indicated.

As projected in the before-described celestial sphere, Kether will govern a radius of 10° around the North Pole, thus embracing the whole body of the constellation Draco.

Chokmah will be on the 60° north latitude; embracing a radius of 10° , the right foot of Hercules; the left arm, hand, and part of head of Bootes. Also on the other side of the heavens, a radius of 10° including the head and shoulders of Cepheus, and the head of Lacerta.

Binah has a similar radius and is posited on the same parallel of latitudes, and includes the pole star of Earth, the head of Camelopardalis, the tip of the tail of Draco, also Lyra and left knee of Hercules in the opposite side of the heavens.

Chesed with a similar radius, and posited in the 30° of north latitude, will include part of Coma Berenices, of Bootes, and of Virgo, and parts of Andromeda and of Pegasus.

And so with the other Sephiroth of the outer pillars, each being 30° distant from the line of the Sephiroth above and below it, and having a radius of 10° .

The central line of the two pillars of mercy and severity will respectively traverse, that of mercy the 15° of Virgo and 15° of Pisces; that of severity the 15° of Gemini and the 15° of Sagittarius. The four Yesod points will be on the line of the 60° of south latitude, and at similar zodiacal points. From which circumstances the path of influence or nature of the sun will be along the line of the ecliptic, coinciding with Tiphareth, and that of the moon will be on the 60° of south latitude answering to the Yesod points on that line.

The Law of the Convoluted Revolution of the Forces Symbolized by the Four Aces Round the Northern Pole ¹⁶

In the Book “T,” it is written: “Also the Dragon (i.e., Draco, the constellation at the northern pole of the heavens) surroundeth the pole Kether of the celestial heavens.” It is further laid down that the four Aces (symbolized by the Princesses and amazons) rule the celestial heavens from the northern pole of the zodiac unto the 45° of latitude north of the ecliptic, and from the thrones of the four Aces which rule in Kether.

And again it is stated that:

The throne of the Ace of Cups—The head of Draco

The throne of the Ace of Swords—Fore part of body

The throne of the Ace of Pentacles—Hind part of body

The throne of the Ace of Wands—Tail of Draco

Regard thou then the form of this constellation of the Dragon. It is convoluted in the four places answering unto the rule of the Aces.

Head, first convolution—Ace of Cups

Second convolution—Ace of Swords

Third convolution—Ace of Pentacles

Fourth convolution—Ace of Wands

And this convoluted course will represent the law of the Aces.

Now in the four faces of YHVH, fire and water be contrary, and also earth and air be contrary. And the throne of the element will attract and seize, as it were, the force of that element, so that herein be the forces of antipathy and of sympathy, or what are known chemically as attraction and repulsion.

Recall also the allotment of the triplicities:

Aries, Leo, Sagittarius	=	Fire	=	Wands of the Tarot.
Cancer, Scorpio, Pisces	=	Water	=	Cups of the Tarot.
Gemini, Libra, Aquarius	=	Air	=	Swords of the Tarot.
Taurus, Virgo, Capricorn	=	Earth	=	Pentacles of the Tarot.

Now, the order of the Princesses, and consequently of the thrones, is formed from right to left thus:

Heh (final)	Vau	Heh	Yod
Princess	Princess	Princess	Princess
of	of	of	of
Pentacles	Swords	Cups	Wands
Taurus	Aquarius	Scorpio	Leo
Earth	Air	Water	Fire

While that of the Aces is formed from left to right, though their motion is from right to left:

Yod	Heh	Vau	Heh (final)
Ace	Ace	Ace	Ace
of	of	of	of
Wands	Cups	Swords	Pentacles

This, then, will be the order of their movement. Let us first suppose the Aces on the following stations:

Station 2	Station 1	Station 12	Station 11
Ace of	Ace of	Ace of	Ace of
Wands	Cups	Swords	Pentacles

Now the Station 2 is the throne of the Ace of Wands, while the movement of the Aces is steadily from right to left in the direction of the numbering of the stations. In the ordinary course the Ace of Wands would pass to Station 3; the Ace of Cups to Station 2; the Ace of Swords to Station 1; the Ace of Pentacles to Station 12.

But the Station 2, being the throne of the Ace of Wands, attracts and arrests the movement of that force so that instead of passing into Station 3, it remains on Station 2 until the other Aces have passed over it in turn.

Ace of Wands remains on Station 2,
Ace of Cups passes also on to Station 2,
Ace of Swords passes on to Station 1,
Ace of Pentacles passes on to Station 12.

Again,

Ace of Cups passes to Station 3,
Ace of Wands remains at Station 2,
Ace of Swords passes also on to Station 2,
Ace of Pentacles passes also on to Station 1.

Again,

Ace of Cups passes on to Station 4,
Ace of Swords passes on to Station 3,
Ace of Wands remains at Station 2,
Ace of Pentacles passes also on to Station 2.

Again,

Ace of Cups passes to Station 5,
Ace of Swords passes to Station 4,
Ace of Pentacles passes on to Station 3,
Ace of Wands still remains on Station 2.

But Station 5 is the throne of the Ace of Cups. Therefore it attracts and arrests that force, in the same manner that the throne of the Ace of Wands acted previously in attracting and arresting the Ace of Wands, the result of which has been to make that force which previously was leading become the last of the four.

Again,

- Ace of Cups remains on Station 5,
- Ace of Swords passes also on to Station 5,
- Ace of Pentacles passes also on to Station 4,
- Ace of Wands now at last passes into Station 3.

For it has now become the last of the four, and the Ace of Cups has commenced to act through its throne, and the Ace of Pentacles, moving to Station 4, a hiatus would occur in the movement of the Aces, if the Ace of Wands did not move forward to Station 3, and also there is the attraction of the motion of those Aces in front of it. Wherefore all these forces combining, at length cause it to move forward.

The movement then continues, thus:

- The Ace of Swords passes on to Station 6,
- The Ace of Cups remains on Station 5,
- The Ace of Pentacles passes also on to Station 5,
- The Ace of Wands passes also on to Station 4.

Again,

- The Ace of Swords passes on to Station 7,
- The Ace of Pentacles passes on to Station 6,
- The Ace of Cups still remains on Station 5,
- The Ace of Wands passes also on to Station 5.

Again,

- The Ace of Swords passes on to Station 8, its Throne,
- The Ace of Pentacles passes on to Station 7,
- The Ace of Wands passes on to Station 6,
- The Ace of Cups still remains on Station 5.

Again,

- The Ace of Swords remains on Station 8,

The Ace of Pentacles passes also on to Station 8,
 The Ace of Wands passes on to Station 7,
 The Ace of Cups now at length passes on to Station 6, and so on.

The movement of the Aces will be very similar to the convolutions of Draco thus:

The Course of the Aces:

And will imply a much more sustained exercise of force through the thrones than elsewhere. So that the generic effect of the thrones will be that of the seasons, while the other stations will give the variations thereof in accordance with their natures and with the order of the movement of the aces in them.

And as Kether acted directly upon Tiphareth which is, as it were, the centre and focus of the Sephiroth when projected in a sphere, so do the Aces act upon the sun as the centre and focus of the solar system. So that the sun, according to his position with regard to the equinox and Earth's surface, will translate the effect of the seasons, he being the translator of the force of heat thereto, whether the then position of the equinoctial points coincide with what we call 0° Aries and 0° Libra (reckoning from Regulus) or not. So that his effect north of the equator shall produce when just leaving the equinoctial point the effect of Aries, whether he be with that constellation actually in the heavens or not.

Conversely also, for the south of the equator (as in the country of Australia) his quitting the equinoctial point southward will translate the same effect of Aries.

But this rule shall not for one moment affirm that Aries and Libra are identical in nature. Nor that the zodiac proper is inoperative. Nor that the nature of the sun is not modified by the constellation in which he is. But only that the direct effect of the physical impact of his rays falling upon a certain portion of Earth's surface, will be in proportion to the duration of their action, in the excitement they produce in the terrestrial forces.

Order of the Passage of the Aces
	Sign	Throne of	First in Order	Second in Order	Third in Order	Fourth in Order
Moveable	♈		▽	△	▽	△
Fixed	♏	Ace of Pentacles	▽	△	▽	△

Fixed	♐	Ace of Cups	▽	△	▽	△
Common	♉		△	▽	△	▽
Moveable	♊		△	▽	△	▽
Fixed	♍	Ace of Swords	△	▽	△	▽
Common	♈		▽	△	▽	△

And now as the forces symbolized by these Aces pass in succession over these stations, so will they awake certain terrestrial action, according unto the sign of the division of the zodiac above which they pass in the domain of the Knaves or Princesses, and according unto the nature thereof. Nevertheless, the force roused by the Ace when on its throne will be of longer duration than at other points.

And hence it is that the signs of the zodiac be divided into fixed or Kerubic, moveable or changing, and common or fluctuating, according unto the nature of the power which can be awakened therein. And again, these will be varied according unto their elements, for the elements have a various classification.

Qualities of Elements
△	Fire:	Heat, dryness, excessive lightness, brilliance, excessive subtlety, motion rapid.
▽	Water:	Cold, moisture, weight, obscurity, solidity, motion.
△	Air:	Heat, moisture, lightness, slight obscurity, subtlety, excessive motion.
▽	Earth	Cold, dryness, excessive weight, excessive obscurity, excessive solidity, rest.

Qualities of the Elements When Mixed in Pairs
△ & ▽	Fire and Water:	Slight weight, some subtlety, intense and rapid motion.
△ & △	Fire and Air:	Great heat, intense lightness, slight brilliance, intense subtlety, tense motion.
△ & ▽	Fire and Earth:	Great dryness, slight obscurity.
▽ & △	Water and Air:	Great moisture, intense motion.
▽ & ▽	Water and Earth:	Great cold, intense weight, intense obscurity, intense solidity.
△ & ▽	Air and Earth:	Some weight, intense obscurity, little solidity, little motion.

Note by S.R.M.D.: I think it is here advisable to transcribe the following from Cornelius Agrippa: ¹⁷

Of the Four Elements and Their Natural Qualities:

“It is necessary that we should know and understand the nature and quality of the four elements, in order to our being perfect in the principles and groundwork of our studies in the talismanic or magical art.

“Therefore, there are four elements, the original grounds of all corporeal things, viz.: earth, air, fire, and water, of which elements all inferior bodies are compounded, not by way of being heaped up together, but by transmutation and union; and when they are destroyed, they are resolved into elements.

“But there are none of the sensible elements that are pure. But they are more or less mixed, and apt to be changed the one into the other, even as earth being moistened and dissolved becomes water, but the same being made thick and hard becomes earth again, and being evaporated through heat it passes into air, and that being kindled into fire; and this being extinguished into air again; but being cooled after burning becomes water again, or else stone or sulphur, and this is clearly demonstrated by lightning.

“Now every one of these elements has two specific qualities: the former whereof it retains as proper to itself; in the other as a mean, it agrees with that which comes directly after it. For fire is hot and dry; water cold and moist; and air hot and moist; and so in this manner the elements, according to two contrary qualities, are opposite one to the other, as fire to water, and earth to air.

“Likewise the elements are contrary one to the other on another account. Two are heavy, as earth and water; and the others are light, as fire and air. Therefore the Stoics called the former ‘passives,’ but the latter ‘actives.’ And Plato distinguishes them after another manner, and assigns to each of them three qualities, viz.: To the fire brightness, thinness, and motion. To the earth, darkness, thickness, and quietness. And according to these qualities the elements of fire and earth are contrary. Now the other elements borrow their qualities from these, so that the air receives two qualities from the fire, thinness and motion, and from the earth one, darkness. In like manner, water receives two qualities from the earth, darkness and thickness; and from the fire one, motion. But fire is twice as thin as air, thrice more moveable, and four times lighter. The air is twice more bright, thrice more thin, and four times more moveable than water. Therefore, as fire is to air, so is air to water, and water to earth. And again, as the earth is to the water, so is water to air, and air to fire. And this is the root and foundation of all bodies, natures, and wonderful works. And he who can know and thoroughly understand these qualities of the elements and their mixtures shall bring to pass wonderful and astonishing things in magic.

“Now each of these elements has a threefold consideration, so that the number of four may make up the number of twelve; and by passing by the number of seven into ten, there may be a progress to the supreme unity upon which all virtue and wonderful things do depend. Of the first order are the pure elements, which are neither compounded, changed, nor mixed, but are incorruptible and not of which but through which the virtues of all natural things are brought forth to act. No man is fully able to declare their virtues, because they can do all things upon all things. He who remains ignorant of these shall never be able to bring to pass any wonderful matter.

“Of the second order are elements that are compounded, changeable, and impure, yet such as may, by art, be reduced to their pure simplicity, whose virtue, when they are thus reduced, doth above all things perfect all occult and common operations of nature; and these are the foundations of the whole of natural magic.

“Of the third order are those elements which originally and of themselves are not elements, but are twice compounded, various, and changeable unto another. These are the infallible medium, and are called the middle nature, or soul of the middle nature; very few there are that understand the deep mysteries thereof. In them is, by means of certain numbers, degrees, and orders, the perfection of every effect in what thing soever, whether natural, celestial, or super-celestial. They are full of wonders and mysteries, and are operative in magic, natural or divine. For, from these, through them, proceeds the binding, loosing, and transmutation of all things—the knowledge and foretelling of things to come, also the expelling of evil and the gaining of good spirits. Let no one, therefore, without these three sorts of elements, and the true knowledge thereof, be confident that he can work anything in the occult science of magic and nature.

“But whosoever shall know how to reduce those of one order into another, impure into pure, compounded into simple, and shall understand distinctly the nature, virtue, and power of them, into number, degrees, and order, without dividing the substance, he shall easily attain to the knowledge and perfect operation of all natural things, and celestial secrets likewise; and this is the perfection of the Qabalah, which teaches all these before mentioned; and by a perfect knowledge thereof, we perform many rare and wonderful experiments. In the original and exemplary world all things are all in all. So also in this corporeal world. And the elements are not only in these inferior things, but are in the heavens, in stars, in devils, in angels, and likewise in God Himself, the maker and original example of all things.

“Now it must be understood that in these inferior bodies the elements are gross and corruptible, but in the heavens they are, with their natures and virtues, after a celestial and more excellent manner than in sublunary things. For the firmness of the celestial Earth is there without the grossness of water, and the agility of air without exceeding its bounds. The heat of fire without burning, only shining, giving light and life to all things by its celestial heat.”

(End of transcription.)

Now the successive effect of the passage of the Aces over the stations above the place of a sign in the excitement of the forces of that sign may be readily calculated by the tables of the qualities of the elements simple and mixed, always being careful to take also into account the effect of the throne upon the season as well, and the nature of the sign.

It is said that Kether is in Malkuth, and again, that Malkuth is in Kether but after another manner.

For downwards through the four worlds the Malkuth of the less material will be linked unto the Kether of the more material. From the synthesis of the ten coruscations of the Aour (light) proceedeth the influence unto Eheieh, the Kether of Atziluth. And the connecting thread of the Ain Soph is extended through the worlds of the ten Sephiroth and is in every direction. As the ten Sephiroth operate in each Sephirah, so will there be a Kether in every Malkuth, and Malkuth in every Kether. Thus:

Adonai Melekh will be the Malkuth of Atziluth.

Metatron will be the Kether of Briah.

Sandalphon

Metatron } will be the Malkuth of Briah.

Nephesch ha-Messiah

Chaioth ha Qadesh will be the Kether of Yetzirah.

Aschim will be the Malkuth of Yetzirah.

Rashith ha Gilgalim, the Kether of Assiah.

Cholem Yesodoth, the Malkuth of Assiah.

Thaumiel, the Kether of the Qlippoth.

The symbol of the connection between Malkuth of Yetzirah and Kether of Assiah will be of a form somewhat resembling that of an hourglass. The thread of the Ain Soph before alluded to, traversing the centre thereof, and forming the Ain Soph connection between the worlds:

So that the symbol of the connection between the two planes is this. And also the modus operandi of the translation of force from one plane into another is in this, and hence doth the title of the sphere of Kether of Assiah signify the commencement of a whirling motion.

Now also, in the diagram of Minutum Mundum, there be four colours attributed unto Malkuth—Citrine, russet, olive, and black. And if we consider them as in a vertical sphere, we shall find citrine uppermost and horizontal, russet and olive midmost and vertical, black lowermost and horizontal.

And again, these four represent in a manner the operation of the four elements in Malkuth; for example:

Citrine—Air of Earth	Russet—Fire of Earth
Olive—Water of Earth	Black—Earth of Earth

From the diagram of the hourglass symbol it will be manifest then that Malkuth of Yetzirah will be the transmitter of the Yetziratic forces unto Kether of Assiah, and that the latter will be the recipient thereof, and that the hourglass symbol or double cone, will be the translator from the one plane unto the other. Here, therefore, let us consider the Yetziratic nomenclature of the tenth path answering unto Malkuth, and of the first path answering unto Kether.

The Tenth Path: It is called the Resplendent Intelligence and it is so called because it is exalted above every head, and sitteth on the throne of Binah, and it illuminateth the splendour of all the lights, and it causeth the current of influence to flow from the Prince of Countenances, i.e., Metatron.

The First Path: It is called the Wonderful or Hidden Intelligence (the highest crown) for it is the light to cause to understand the primordial without commencement, and it is the primal glory, for nothing created is worthy to follow out its essence.

Whence it is plain that Malkuth is, as it were, the collector together and synthesis of all the forces in its plane or world. While Kether being superior unto all else in its plane or world, will be the recipient and arranger of the forces from the plane beyond, so as to distribute them unto its subordinate Sephiroth in a duly ordered manner.

And therefore any force of the multitudinous and innumerable forces in Malkuth may act through the upper cone of the hourglass symbol, and by means of the lower one translate its operation into Kether below, but its mode of transmission will be through the cones by the thread of the Ain Soph, or of the unformulated.

So that in the transmission of force between two worlds the formulate must first become unformulate, ere it can reformulate in new conditions. For it must be plain that a force formulated in one world, if translated into another will be unformulated, according to the laws of a plane different in nature. Even as water in its fluid state will be subject to different laws to those governing it when in the conditions of either ice or steam.

And as before said, there being in the Minutum Mundum diagram four chief elemental divisions of the Sephirah Malkuth, each of these will have its correlative formula of transmission unto the succeeding Kether. Hence also in the Order tarot teaching is there the dominion of the four Knaves or Princesses of the tarot pack around the north pole. Why then is it that it is the four amazons or Knaves, answering unto the final Heh of YHVH, that are here placed, rather than the four Kings, Queens, or Princes, or one of each nature?

We are taught that these are the vice regents of the name in the Four Worlds, and that they are thus attributed among the Sephiroth.

Yod	Heh	Vau	Heh (final)
Chokmah	Binah	Tiphareth	Malkuth
King	Queen	Prince	Princess

Now as Kether of Assiah is to receive from Malkuth of Yetzirah, it is necessary that in and about Kether there should be a force which partaketh of the nature of Malkuth, though more subtle and refined in nature. And therefore is it that the final Heh, or Princess force, have their dominion placed about Kether. They are so placed that they may attract from the Malkuth of the higher and form the basis of action for the Aces. So that a refined matter may attract its like, and the spiritual forces may not lose themselves in the void, to produce but a mistaken and whirling destruction for want of a settled basis. And herein is the mutual formula in all things, of a spirit and of a body, seeing that each supplies unto each that wherein the other is lacking, yet herein also must there be a certain condition, otherwise the harmony will not be perfect. For unless the body be refined in nature, it will hinder the action of a spirit cognate unto it. And unless the spirit be willing to ally itself unto the body, the latter will be injured thereby and each will mutually react on the other.

Therefore, also, let the Adeptus Minor understand that there may be fault of the spirit as well as of the body, and that there is little difference between the material and sensuous person, and the envious, malicious, and self-righteous person—save that from their being more subtle and less evident, the sins of the latter are more insidious than those of the former, though both are alike evil. But it is as necessary to govern the spirit as to refine the body, and of what use is it to weaken the body by abstinence, if at the same time uncharitableness and spiritual pride are encouraged? It is simply translating one sin into another.

And therefore are the final Heh forces so necessary in Kether, as it is said in the tenth path of the Sepher Yetzirah: “It is so called because it is exalted above every head, and sitteth on the throne of Binah.” Now, in the Tree the two Sephiroth, Chokmah and Binah, are referred unto the Briatic world which is also called the throne or vehicle, that is, of the Atzilutic world unto which latter Kether is referred on the Tree. And referring unto the dominions of the four Princesses, thou shalt find that in the sphere they include Chokmah and Binah as well as Kether.

Now there will be not one, but four formulae of the application of the four forces of Malkuth, unto the revolution of the Aces in Kether, and these acting not singly but simultaneously and with a different degree of force.

Were Malkuth or Kether in the same plane or world the transmission of these forces from the one unto the other would proceed more or less in direct lines. In this case, seeing that Malkuth and Kether be in different planes or worlds, the lines of transmission of these forces are caught up and whirled about by the upper cone of the hourglass symbol into the vortex where through passeth the thread of the unformulated, i.e., the Ain Soph. Thence they are projected in a whirling convolution (yet according unto their nature) through the lower cone of the hourglass symbol unto Kether.

Whence it resulteth that these formulae are of the nature of the dragon, that is to say, moving in convolutions, and hence they are called the dragon or serpent formulae.

Now imagining Malkuth of Yetzirah to be in a vertical position above Kether of Assiah, it will be plain that the whole of the black part of Malkuth will be towards Kether, but only a portion of the russet and olive parts, and that the citrine parts will be entirely removed and on the further side. Wherefore the natural operation of these four forces towards Kether will be: black, rather horizontal than vertical, and acting fully. Citrine rather horizontal than vertical but acting at the edge of the circumference of Kether, and slightly rather than strongly. Russet and olive rather vertical than horizontal, and acting moderately.

Now these four formulae will imply four simultaneous movements in the revolution of the forces symbolized by the four aces round the northern pole.

Direct or Creeping Formula

The first and most forcible in its immediate action will be that answering unto the earth of Malkuth of Yetzirah, transmitting unto Kether of Assiah, and following the convolutions of the constellation Draco. It is called the direct or creeping formula and for this reason the dragon may be wingless and footed as regards its symbolic representation. This formula has been thoroughly explained in the beginning of this section on the revolution of the Aces. In the expressions earth of Malkuth, etc., it should be remembered that these do not imply pure but mixed elemental natures, seeing that Malkuth receiveth the ultimate effect of all the forces in the Tree of Life, even as the colours which be attributed thereto be not primaries, but tertiaries. Therefore each element in Malkuth will be counterchanged with others, even as the Kerubim in the vision of Ezekiel have each not one, but four heads, and counterchanged.

The second and least forcible in its immediate action will be the dragon formula answering unto the air of Malkuth of Yetzirah, transmitting unto Kether of Assiah, and following the convolutions of four serpents upon the four triplicities of the elements in the zodiac or, more properly speaking, upon the stations in the dominions of the Princesses above them. (Now also the throne in each dominion is marked in the Book “T” as embracing more than a third of each dominion, because of the enduring effect of its force.) This formula is also called the looped or flying formula, and hence the serpents may be represented footless, but winged. Its action is more round the circumference at its edge, than that of the other formulae. This formula of operations will be readily understood on reference to the diagram thereof, but more especially from the four diagrams showing the change of order and course of the Aces. In this formula the heads of the four serpents will be above the four cardinal signs.

Looped or Flying Formula

The third dragon formula, moderately forcible in its immediate action, is that answering unto the fire of Malkuth of Yetzirah, transmitting unto Kether of Assiah, and following the law of the attraction and repulsion of the elements of the triplicities of the zodiac. This is also called the leaping or darting formula, and its serpents may be represented both footed and winged—footed to represent the attraction of the elements, winged to represent the repulsion by the contrary elements. This formula is more vertical in action, while the preceding two are more horizontal as before shown. This formula will be readily understood from the four diagrams thereof and also from those showing the change of order in the course of the Aces. As before the heads of the serpents rest upon the stations above the cardinal signs.

The explanation of the course of one of the four serpents will be sufficient to explain the whole. Let us take that of fire:

Fire is strongly attracted by the station above fire, fire is strongly repelled by the station above water, fire is slightly attracted by the station above air, fire is slightly repelled by the station above earth.

Leaping or Darting Formula

The head rests on the station above Aries.

The serpent is repelled into the lower cone by Pisces.

The serpent is slightly attracted by Aquarius.

The serpent is slightly attracted by Capricorn.

The serpent is strongly attracted by Sagittarius.

The serpent is strongly repelled by Scorpio.

The serpent is slightly attracted by Libra.

The serpent is slightly attracted by Virgo.

The serpent is strongly attracted by Leo.

The serpent is strongly repelled by Cancer.

The serpent is slightly attracted by Gemini and Taurus.

The tail is strongly attracted by Aries, where it is united with the head again. (The course of the four serpents is shown in four different diagrams to avoid confusion.)

Revolving or Flowing Formula

The fourth dragon formula, moderately forcible, is that answering unto the water of Malkuth of Yetzirah, transmitting into the Kether of Assiah, and following the law of the zodiacal succession of the signs in gradual order. This is also called the revolving or flowing formula, and its serpent may be represented neither winged nor footed, but with fins to symbolize its flowing movement. This formula will be more vertical in action, and can be readily understood from the diagram thereof, and from those showing the change of order in the course of the Aces.

This formula may be best symbolically represented by the four Aces revolving as in a smaller wheel upon a great circle whose body is composed of the powers of the twelve signs, so that this latter in its turn revolves upon the stations above the zodiac. The effect of the revolution of the wheel of the Aces will be to excite by the Ace of Wands the fiery signs, by the Ace of Cups the watery signs, by the Ace of Swords the airy signs, and by the Ace of Pentacles the earthy signs. Yet through the forces of the revolution of the serpent as well, the forces of the Aces will be in their turn modified by the zodiacal natures in the body of the serpent.

And as before said the action of these formulae will be simultaneous though differing in degree, and of them all that first explained which followeth the convolutions of the constellation Draco is the strongest in operation. And it is to be noted that in two of these formulae, the heads of the serpents are with the order of the signs, and in the other two against the natural order of succession of them in the zodiac.

Also the action of the spirit of Malkuth of Yetzirah transmitting unto Kether of Assiah will equal that of continued vibratory rays, acting from the centre to the circumference, and thus bringing into action the force from the “thread of the unformulate,” Mezla.

Recall that which is written in the chapter of the chariot—(Ezekiel, 1. 45.)

“And I beheld, and lo! a tempestuous whirlwind came out from the north, a mighty cloud, and a fire violently whirling upon itself, and a splendour revolving upon itself, and from the midmost as an eye of brightness from the midst of the fire. And from the midmost the forms of the four Chaioth.”

14. Note by S.R.M.D.: In the zodiac of Denderah and in the Tablet of Edfu, Ursa Major is represented as the thigh of an ox.

15. Note by S.R.M.D.: While the greater number of the northern constellations are connected with classical mythology, the titles of many of the southern constellations, and especially of those near the South Pole, are of more or less recent nomenclature, and bear witness to absence of reference to occult knowledge; such names for instance as Reticulum, Caelum Sculptoris, Octans, etc.

16. Note by Regardie: Though this is not official to the grade of Zelator Adeptus Minor, nor included within the general tarot instructions usually issued, it is manifestly written by Greatly Honoured

Frater S.R.M.D. Some students consider it a highly important piece of work, claiming that it was part of the study prescribed for the Theoricus Adeptus Minor. Clearly, it requires further teaching thoroughly to be understood, but students who have a good working knowledge of astrology, as well as an understanding of the theory of the tattwa tides or currents, will find that this document throws much light on the esoteric system of astrological divination.

BOOK NINE

The Angelic Tablets

INTRODUCTION TO THE ENOCHIAN SYSTEM

By Frater Ad Majorem Adonai Gloriam

To the First Order of the Golden Dawn little was said of the angelic tablets or watchtowers. They were mentioned in the grade rituals but their subject matter did not enter into the knowledge lectures directly. But the detailed study of the tablets and the method of using them with the Enochian invocations for skrying in the spirit vision formed a definite part of the course of work prescribed for the Adeptus Minor of the R.R. et A.C., though I have never met anybody who had done it with any degree of thoroughness.

There was a considerable mass of detailed and highly complex instruction on this subject, contained in a number of documents. There are in my possession manuscripts totalling at least 70,000 words, besides some large charts, diagrams, and coloured boards. Therefore it has been found necessary to provide a paper which attempts to cover the whole ground in logical sequence giving quotations where necessary from the original documents of G.H. Frater D.D.C.F. This probably will be of more general use than reproducing the whole rather disconnected mass of Enochian literature, which in many cases is simply a development of the fundamentals, and thus can be worked up by each individual reader who studies this book.

At the outset, let it be said that a good deal of systematic study will be required to appreciate the value and subtle significance of this system. It is one of the most amazing magical schemes that I have ever encountered, since it provides a thoroughgoing and comprehensive synthesis of the entire magical system of the Golden Dawn. Every important item of knowledge and practice found itself incorporated within the scope of these angelic tablets. Every worthwhile technical form of magical procedure and all branches of ritualistic work find themselves represented in a single noble system.

Therefore, because it is a synthetic amalgamation of all the Order work, the student will find it necessary and imperative to have made himself thoroughly familiar with all the other items of knowledge taught by the Golden Dawn. He must know his tarot and geomantic attributions so well that the names, symbols, and ideas are all at his fingertips—this, naturally, in addition to the basic knowledge items of the Hebrew alphabet, Tree of Life, and the Qabalah generally. The formulae of practical magic derived from the Z documents, dealing with the symbolism of the candidate, the temple, and the ceremony of the Neophyte grade, will require to be not only memorized and known, but understood. The student will need to be perfectly acquainted with the pentagram and hexagram rituals, the formulae of the consecration ceremonies, the general art of invocation, and formulating telematic images, and drawing sigils. The tablets are excellent instances of talismans and flashing tablets.

D.D.C.F. says in his Notanda to the Book of the Concourse of the Forces that “the tablets of Enoch require in truth many years of study, and will repay such an expenditure of time and energy. The knowledge embodied in this manuscript is very superficial and elementary, and entirely fails to do justice to the Enochian scheme. You must take it as only a feeble attempt to provide what is seen at first glance, by the intellect, and as having no relation to the world of spiritual truth which the tablets enshrine and which a high adept can make them give out.”

Very little is known about the origin of these tablets and the invocations that accompany their use. Practically nothing was said in the Order which explained this matter, though in the Adeptus Minor ritual it is said that Christian Rosenkreutz and his immediate colleagues, whose supposed date is circa 1400 AD, transcribed some “of the magical language, which is that of the elemental tablets.” So far as we are able to make out, however, the system originated by means of the ceremonial skrying of Dr. John Dee and Sir Edward Kelly towards the close of the sixteenth century. The original diaries of Dr. John Dee, recording the development of the system, may be found in Sloane Manuscripts 3189–3191 in the British Museum. But this stands out very clearly, that in these diaries is a rudimentary scheme which bears only the most distant relation to the extraordinarily developed system in use by the order. Whoever was responsible for the order scheme of the angelic tablets—whether it was Mathers and Westcott or the German Rosicrucian Adepts from whom the former are supposed to have obtained their knowledge—was possessed of an ingenuity and an understanding of magic such as never was in the possession either of Dee or Kelly.

Some of the order clairvoyants have claimed that Dee and Kelly in some way obtained access to the construction of the Enochian system whilst they were in Central Europe. It is claimed that numerous Rosicrucian centres existed in Germany, Austria, and Bohemia, and both Dee and Kelly were received therein. Whilst this may be a plausible theory, there is not the least vestige of objective evidence for this assumption. Still others have believed that it represents a revival of certain species of Atlantean Magic, though those who press this theory do not explain the Dee diaries, nor his account of the method he and Edward Kelly employed to acquire the roots of this system.

Roughly, the facts which are concerned with the origins of the system are these. Over one hundred large squares filled with letters were obtained by Dee and Kelly in a manner which we cannot quite determine. When working, Dee, for example, would have before him on a writing table one or more of these tables, as a rule 49" x 49", some full while others were lettered only on alternate squares. Then Sir Edward Kelly would sit down at what they called the Holy Table on which were various magical pentacles, and which also rested on wax seals. On this table was a large crystal or shewstone, in which, after a while, he reported to see an angel who would point with a wand to letters on certain charts in succession. Kelly would thereupon report to Dee that the angel pointed, for example, to column four, rank twenty-nine, of one of the many charts, and so on, apparently not mentioning the letter, which Dee would then find on the table before him and write it down. When the angel had finished his instruction, the message—when it concerned certain of the major invocations or calls—was rewritten backwards. It had been dictated the wrong way round by the angel since it was considered too dangerous to communicate in a straightforward manner, each word being so powerful a conjuration that its direct pronunciation or dictation would have evoked powers and forces not desired at that moment.

Regardless of their origin, these tablets and the whole Enochian system do represent realities of the inner planes. Their value is undoubted, as only a little study and application prove. Whilst it may seem, at first sight, that their governance is solely in the world of the elementals, that is the astral plane, there is much to indicate that they extend to planes which are spiritual and divine in nature. In any event the magical conception of the elements is rather different from that which obtains in most so-called occult philosophies.

Perhaps a word or two of caution might be added. Undoubtedly prudence is required in this matter. It is a very powerful system, and if used carelessly and indiscriminately will bring about disaster and spiritual disintegration. The warnings given in connection with the invocations are not to be regarded as conventions or as platitudinous moralizings. They represent a knowledge of true facts, and the student will do well to take cognizance thereof. Let him study the theory first of all, so that he has a thorough knowledge of the construction of the squares and pyramids. This must be so ingrained within his mind that a glance at the tablets will automatically start an associative current which will bring up without delay the attributions of any given letter or square which strikes the eye. Only when this has been accomplished dare he venture to the actual use of the pyramids with the godforms, or to the employment of the invocations in ceremonial.

At this juncture, also, let me record one or two facts about the angelic language in which the invocations are couched. The Outer Order rituals state, when the tablets are pointed out in the temple to the candidate, that they are written “in what our tradition calls the angelic secret language.” The tablets in use in the temples, as well as those reproduced herein, are lettered in English. These, however, are a translation or, more accurately, a transliteration of characters belonging to the Enochian alphabet. These letters will be found reproduced on a later page. It is said that these letters are not simple in character, but partake of the nature of sigils. In the section on talismans, it will have been noticed that certain geomantic emblems and astrological symbols are referred to these letters.

This angelic secret language, whatever its origin, is a true language. It has, quite clearly, a syntax and grammar of its own, and the invocations in that language are not mere strings of words, but sentences which can be translated, not simply transliterated into English. For instance, the invocation of the three archangels ruling over the Spirit tablet, employed in the opening of the Portal grade, reads: “Ol Sonuf Vaorsagi Goho Iada Balata. Lexarph, Comanan, Tabitom. Zodakara, eka; zodakare od zodamran. Odo kikle qaa, piape piaomoel od vaoan.” This, translated, means “I will reign over you, saith the God of justice. Lexarph, Comanan, Tabitom, move, therefore. Show yourselves forth and appear. Declare unto us the mysteries of your creation, the balance of righteousness and truth.”

In a First Order side lecture issued to newly initiated Zelatores by G.H. Fratres Sub Spe, there is this note on the Enochian system and language which might be worth reproducing:

“One more point is shown you in this first part of the 1°=10th grade, and that is the great terrestrial watchtower or tablet of the north. At present it will probably be to all of you who are here present, with the exception of those who have passed into the Second Order, an absolute sea of mystery. It appears a curious arrangement of squares and letters in different colours, and perhaps you may wonder to see English and not Hebrew letters upon it, seeing that it is one of the most ancient symbols in the world. I may tell you, without betraying any knowledge which is beyond you, that these letters are transliterated for convenience. I do not think there is any one present, except myself, who could read the original language in which they are written. But I may tell you that it is a great curiosity merely from the linguistic point of view, because that language, and those characters in which it is written, are a perfect language which can be translated, and yet there is no record, so far as I am aware, that that language was ever spoken, or those characters were ever used by mortal man. Now that Müller and other great philologists have said that it is impossible that any human being should invent a language, here is a language which has existed for as far back as we are able to trace. We find traces of it on rock-cut pillars and on temples, apparently as old as the world. We find traces of it in the sacred mysteries of some of the oldest religions in the world, but we find no trace of it ever having been used as a living language, and we hold the tradition that it is the angelic secret language. Only one instance of this I may perhaps be allowed to give. The high priest of Jupiter in the earliest days of Rome was called Flamen Dialis, and you will find that the most learned are utterly ignorant as to whence came the word Dialis. They will tell you that it is ancient Etruscan, but beyond that they can tell you nothing. It is not the genitive of any known nominative. On that tablet (earth) you will see that the second of the three holy secret names of God is Dial.”

Although no philologist, and without the least scientific knowledge of comparative languages, yet I have found the study of this angelical or Enochian language an absorbing interest. Going through the invocations with the intention of compiling a dictionary of the extant words has convinced me personally that we have here fragmentary pieces of a very ancient tongue—a language which is far older even than the Sanskrit. It must have been a living tongue at one time, though many thousands of years ago, and it may therefore be claimed for Enochian that the fragments we do have are in the oldest language of which we have any knowledge. In short, though as pure speculation, it is believed that the language in which these invocations are written are remnants of the tongue of the age-old Atlanteans. True, there are no means for the time being of proving this speculation, or of bringing forward the least convincing item of corroboration other than that it is an instinctive or intuitive conviction. In the quotation rendered above, Frater Sub Spe does give one example of an Enochian word appearing in antiquity, and this to some may prove suggestive. If only we knew it, there probably are hordes of words similar to the case quoted, and these may come to light when expert attention is given to the subject.

Since writing the above, another instance of an Enochian word has come to my attention. Reading Charles Johnson's translation of, and Theosophical commentary upon, the great Upanishads of India, I find reference to a certain character of legend, Uma Haimavati. The Kena Upanishad speaks of her as the daughter of the Snowy Mountain, and she is, interprets Mr. Johnson, a symbol of the hidden Wisdom personified as the child of the Himalaya who reveals the Eternal. And Charles Johnson then proceeds, "Curiously, while the inner significance of the name of this woman greatly radiant is lost in Sanskrit, it must have been clear in the older tongue which lies behind Sanskrit, for it remains in the group of younger Aryan tongues called Slavonic. Here, the root Um is the common word for intelligence."

The italics marked in Johnson's commentary are mine. This point must strongly be indicated, for the significance of that word Um is retained, not alone in the Slavonic as shown by Mr. Johnson, but also in the Enochian or angelical language. For example, in the Second Enochian Key, used to invoke the angels of the Spirit Tablet, and in the Sixteenth Key we find the word Om translated by "understand." (Let me remark here too, that the translation of the words in the Enochian invocations came from the same occult or angelic source as the invocations themselves, and were not made by either Dee or Kelly.) Again, in the Fifteenth Key, we find the English version of the Call "O thou ... who knowest" as equivalent to Ils...ds omax. While in the Call of the Thirty Aethers, Oma is rendered as "understanding."

Thus there is every indication to believe that if there was a language "which lies behind Sanskrit" as supposed by Mr. Charles Johnson and of course by many others, which according to the philosophy of the ancient wisdom is that of Atlantis, then the Enochian or angelical language bears several strong points of resemblance to it.

Yet, the puzzle is this. Prior to the previously described ceremonial skrying of Dr. Dee and Sir Edward Kelly towards the close of the sixteenth century there is absolutely no trace of any part of the Enochian magical system or angelical language in Europe. There are innumerable ancient and mediaeval records of so-called “barbarous names of evocation,” many of them being assembled apparently in sentences and runes, etc. But none of these latter have the coherence which the Enochian language does have, nor do they betray traces of grammar and syntax which are clearly indicated in the angelical keys. In some incomprehensible manner, this pair of psychics must have stumbled on a thread which unfolded, perhaps from their own subconscious memory of former lives, parts of this strange tongue of a bygone age. Stumbled, I use advisedly, for a close perusal of their diaries both published and unpublished reveals nothing to indicate that Dee or Kelly had anything but the remotest idea of what it was that they were recording so carefully. The way they have recorded the invocations, as shown in Sloane ms. 3191 in the British Museum, indicates they had never studied its intricacies or grammar, and thus many words became jumbled and joined together. Only a little study of the Calls is necessary to reveal their mistakes, and to restore what is clearly the original arrangement of words. For instance, the word L or El meaning “the first” or “one” is invariably joined on to the succeeding word in the Dee version; there is no necessity for this.

It is clear that the angelical language was not in the possession of a possessive case, and thus we find several instances of the English translation, where the possessive case is used, not tallying exactly with the Enochian. We find Lonshi Tox translated by “his power” when strictly it ought to be, if the words are literally to be translated “the power of him,” and Elzap Tilb is rendered “her course” instead of “the course of her.” I mention this simply to show that the language is a real one, and not a mere jumble of unmeaning words to which an arbitrary translation was given. With the publication of the invocations here, I hope that serious experienced philologists will devote some attention to this matter so that we can thrash out once and for all, on the objective plane, the true nature of the language and the vertical source of its origins.

It is said in the 5° = 6° ritual that some of the early fratres of the order compiled a dictionary of this language. At any rate, such is not in existence now, though the writer, using the Angelical Calls, has compiled a dictionary of the extant Enochian words. Unfortunately, it is not possible to include this dictionary with the present account of Order teaching.

Incidentally, for practical purposes, the language is pronounced by taking each letter separately, whenever a lack of vowels renders it necessary. But, with a little practice, the pronunciation will come instinctively when the student wants it. “Z” is always pronounced “Zod” with a long “o.”

My last word is an insistence upon the necessity for a thorough grasp of the preliminary part. It should be read again and again, so that the student actually absorbs the material, rather than learns it by a feat of memory or conscious intellection. It may take some months this way, but once he has made it a part of his mode of thinking, so that it has been assimilated into the very structure of his brain, the real significance and meaning of the system will begin to dawn on him.

THE BOOK OF THE CONCOURSE OF THE FORCES

Part One: The Enochian Tablets

The Enochian tablets are four in number, each referred to one of the elements of earth, air, fire, and water. In addition to these four there is another smaller tablet, which is called the Tablet of Union, referred to the element of ether or spirit. Its function, as its name implies, is to unite and bind together the four elemental tablets. For purposes of study, the four elemental tablets or watchtowers are arranged as are the elements in the pentagram, although the order is rather different:

1. Air Tablet	2. Water Tablet
3. Earth Tablet	4. Fire Tablet

To each tablet are referred innumerable attributions, which will be dealt with in the course of this paper, the principal elementary ones being those of colour. Certain squares on each tablet were painted in the colour of the element, according to the King Scale, whilst others were left wholly or partly white. Thus in each tablet there are four principal types of square. There are those of:

1. The Great Cross of thirty-six squares, lettered in black on white, stretching through the entire tablet.
2. The Sephirotic Calvary Crosses, lettered also in black on white, in the four corners on the tablets.
3. The Kerubic squares, which are always in the elemental colour of the tablet, and are the four squares immediately above each Sephirotic cross.
4. The servient squares, always in the colour of the tablet, and consisting of the sixteen squares of each lesser angle beneath each Sephirotic cross.

The Kerubic and servient squares on each tablet are coloured in the elemental colour, with the letters drawn thereon in the complementary colour, thus:

Air tablet painted in yellow. Lettering on air quarter mauve.

Water tablet painted in blue. Lettering on water quarter orange.

Earth tablet painted in black. Lettering on earth quarter green.

Fire tablet painted in red. Lettering on fire quarter green.

The lettering on the other three angles follows the element. Thus, to consider the fire tablet as an example, the colouring of each angle of the tablet will be:

1.
Lesser angle of Air yellow letters on red

2.
Lesser angle of Water blue letters on red

3.
Lesser angle of Earth black letters on red

4.
Lesser angle of Fire green letters
on red

The Tablet of Union, which is attributed to spirit, the fifth point of the pentagram, is a small tablet of twenty squares, five letters wide, four deep. Its letters are painted on a white ground:

EXARP, attributed to air, is painted in yellow letters. 1st line.

HCOMA, attributed to water, is painted in blue letters. 2nd line.

NANTA, attributed to earth, is painted in black letters. 3rd line.

BITOM, attributed to fire, is painted in red letters. 4th line.

Each of these twenty squares is attributed in part to spirit, and its letters are used in combination with those on the elemental tablets in the formation of certain names.

The most important item on each angelic tablet is the Great Cross whose shaft descends from top to bottom and whose bar crosses the tablet in the centre. This cross comprises thirty-six squares, and has a double vertical line which is called Linea Dei Patris Filii, the Line of God the Father and the Son, and Linea Spiritus Sancti, the Line of the Holy Spirit, crossing this horizontally, and containing one rank of letters. The Linea Spiritus Sancti is always the seventh line or rank of letters from the top, while the two vertical columns of the Linea Dei Patris Filii are always the sixth and seventh columns counting from either right or left.

From this Great Cross, various angelic and divine names are produced, which are of supreme importance. First of all there are the “three great secret holy names of God” which are found in the Linea Spiritus Sancti. This line comprises twelve letters, which are divided into names of three, four, and five letters reading from left to right. Thus in the air tablet, you will find ORO IBAH AOZPI; in the water tablet, MPH ARSL GAIOL; in the earth tablet, MOR DIAL HCTGA; and in the fire tablet, OIP TEAA PDOCE.

These three secret holy names of God are the major names of the tablets. These names are conceived to be borne as ensigns upon the banners of the great king of each quarter. The name of the great king is always a name of eight letters and comprises a spiral or whirl in the centre of the Great Cross. Thus in the air tablet, the great king is BATAIVAH. It is produced:

Creation of BATAIVAH

And so for the other three angelic tablets. The king is a very powerful force, and since it initiates the whirl it is to be invoked with due care.

The next series of important names obtained from the Great Cross are the six seniors. Their names begin from the sixth and seventh squares of the Linea Spiritus Sancti, including these squares, and read outwards along the three lines of the cross to the edge of the tablet. Each is a name of seven letters. In the case of the air tablet, the six seniors are:

HABIORO

AAOXAI F

HTMORDA

AHAOZPI

HIPOTGA

Creation of Six Seniors

(Note the overlapping of names in the central squares.) The eight-lettered name of the king and the six names of seven letters each of the seniors are invoked by means of the hexagram. They are attributed to the sun and planets and are on a different and higher plane than are the elemental names. The attribution to the points of the hexagram is:

The king is attributed to the sun, and the six solar hexagrams invoke him. The senior formed on the left hand of the Linea Spiritus Sancti is attributed to Mars; that on the right hand to Venus. The name of the senior formed by the letters in the upper half of the Linea Dei Patris (which is the left descending column of the cross, as the right column is the Linea Dei Filiique) is attributed to Jupiter, and the lower half to Mercury. The senior formed by the letters on the upper half of the Linea Dei Filiique is referred to Luna, whilst the name formed by the letters in the lower half is referred to Saturn.

These rules apply to each of the four tablets and are constant and invariable throughout. These three sets of names—the holy names of God, the name of the king, and the names of the six seniors—are all taken from the great central cross. Their names are always painted in black letters on a white ground.

We must now refer to the lesser angles of each tablet. The order given to the arrangement of the four tablets also applies to the structure of each individual tablet, for each is shown together with its appropriate sub-elements. The Great Cross is the mechanism which divides the tablet and separates (and binds together) the four sub-elements or lesser angles, as they are called, from the other.

In the centre of each lesser angle will be seen a cross of ten squares. This is called the Sephirotic Calvary Cross. From the letters arranged on this cross are taken two divine names which call forth and control the angels and spirits of the lesser angle, and their names are used in a preliminary invocation when working magically with a square of a lesser angle. From the vertical line of the Sephirotic Cross, reading from above downwards, comes a deity name of six letters. Thus, in the air lesser angle of the air tablet, we find, in the white descending line of the cross, the name IDOIGO. It is with this name that the angels and spirits of the lesser angle are to be called. From the crossbar, reading from left to right, comes the deity name of five letters, ARDZA, which is used to command those angels called by the first name. Thus in every Sephirotic Cross in every lesser angle, we obtain two divine names. One on the descending shaft, always of six letters, and one on the crossbar, reading from left to right, of five letters. These names must be read in these prescribed directions, for if they are reversed, they call forth evil forces. Like the names from the Great Cross, these names on the Sephirotic Cross are painted in black letters on white. But unlike the former, these latter are employed with the pentagram.

We now come to the coloured squares grouped above and below the Sephirotic Cross in each of the lesser angles. The most important of these are the four above the crossbar of the Sephirotic Cross—called the Kerubic squares. From these four squares are derived four names of four letters each. Thus, for the top rank of the airy angle of the air tablet, we have:

R Z (I) L A

Note that the white square in the centre belongs to the Sephirotic Cross and is not included in the names derived from the Kerubic squares. From these four letters we obtain four names, thus: RZLA, ZLAR, LARZ, ARZL.

These four names, the names of the four Kerubic angels of the lesser angle, rule the servient squares below the Sephirotic Cross, and of the four, the first is the most powerful as the others are derived therefrom. By prefixing to these four names a letter from the appropriate line of the Tablet of Union, we obtain even more powerful names, archangelic in character. Thus for the Kerubic rank of the air lesser angle of the air tablet, which we are using as our example, the letter E of the word EXARP on the tablet of Union is prefixed. This produces ERZLA, EZLAR, ELARZ, EARZL.

The rule is that the first letter of the appropriate line of the Tablet of Union is prefixed only to the names formed from the Kerubic squares. In the airy angle of the water tablet, the principal Kerubic name is TAAD. The name formed by the addition of the appropriate letter from the Tablet of Union is HTAAD: and so on. As an example of this method applied to the remaining servient squares of the air angle of the air tablet, we find:

X is added to the sixteen servient squares of the angle of air.

A is added to the sixteen servient squares of the angle of water.

R is added to the sixteen servient squares of the angle of earth.

P is added to the sixteen servient squares of the angle of fire.

Hence EXARP will be used entirely on the air tablet, and is never used on the other three tablets. The first letter applies to the Kerubic squares of each of the four lesser angles, whilst the remaining four letters apply to the sixteen servient squares of those angles as shown above. The other names of the Tablet of Union are attributed similarly to water, earth, and fire. As an example, I give below names formed from the lesser angle of fire in the water tablet:

n	L	i	r	x	HnLrx	HLrxn	HrxnL	HxnLr
a	T	a	p	a
x	P	a	c	n	AxPcn	APcnx	AcnxP	AnxPc
V	a	a	s	a	AVasa	AasaV	AsaVa	AaVas
d	A	s	p	i	AdApi	AApid	ApidA	AidAp
r	n	d	i	L	ArniL	AniLr	AiLrn	ALrni

Lesser Angle of Fire of Water Tablet

The ritual for the consecration of the four elemental weapons gives excellent examples of the spirit or archangelic names formed from the Kerubic squares by the addition of letters from the Tablet of Union.

The Attribution of the Name Yod He Vau He

This name is the key to the whole of the Enochian attributions of the squares to the elements. The letters are thus referred:

⚡	Yod	Fire	Wands
☵	He	Water	Cups
☶	Vau	Air	Swords
♄	(final) He	Earth	Pentacles

Air Tablet

Water Tablet

Earth Tablet

Fire Tablet

Attribution of the Great Name to the Four Tablets

Not only are the letters of Tetragrammaton attributed to the tablets themselves, and to the lesser angles of the tablets, but they are so arranged that even the squares of the tablets come under the jurisdiction and governance of the letters. So far as concerns the Great Cross, the method for attributing to it the letters of the name is to divide each vertical and horizontal line into groups of three adjoining squares. Against the top left hand corner of the Great Cross, and on the left of its horizontal shaft, put the letter of the name for the element of the tablet, thus Vau for the air tablet, Yod for the fire tablet, etc.

Attribution of the Great Name to the Great Cross

Each square of the above diagram represents three squares on the tablets. This attribution is perfectly simple if it be remembered that the letter consonant to the tablet always comes to the top and left. The arrows show the direction in which the name is to be read.

The Sephirotic Crosses in the lesser angles have, as the student will already have noted, ten squares, each of which is referred to one of the Sephiroth of the Tree of Life. The Sephirotic Cross therefore represents the Sephiroth modified by the letter of the lesser angle. Thus Kether in the airy lesser angle is the Kether of Vau. In the watery lesser angle, it is the Kether of Heh, and so on. The letters, in this case, as elsewhere explained, refer to the four worlds.

Referring to the other squares of the lesser angles, in the Kerubic rank the outside square is always attributed to the letter corresponding to the element of the lesser angle. In the tablets of air and water, the name reads right to left in the two upper quarters; in the two lower quarters it reads from left to right. In the tablets of earth and fire, left to right in the upper, but in the two lower quarters from right to left. Thus in the four tablets, the name reads:

Though the last two groups of the name are the same, this does not indicate that the squares are identical. Their elemental composition differs enormously in each lesser angle, as a little later will be seen.

The servient squares beneath the Calvary Cross may be considered as of four vertical columns of four squares each, or, looking at it from a different angle, of four horizontal ranks also of four squares each. In attributing the letters of Tetragrammaton to these servient squares, the rule is that they follow the attributions of the Kerubic squares. The columns (that is, reading from above downwards) follow the order of the Kerubic squares above, and this order is invariably followed downwards for the ranks, reading from right to left. Thus in the air lesser angle of the air tablet, the Kerubic rank has attribution to the Name:

VAU

YOD

HEH (Final)

Therefore applying the above rule, the servient squares beneath the Sephirothic Cross follow:

	VAU	HEH	YOD	HEH (Final)
HEH (Final)	*	*	*	*
YOD	*	*	*	*
HEH	*	*	*	*
VAU	*	*	*	*

From this example, it will be clearly indicated that each square has a double attribution to the letters of Tetragrammaton, none being the same since a column and a rank differ. Thus, column Vau rank Yod does not coincide in nature with column Yod rank Vau.

We must now approach the reason for this complex series of references of the letters of the Tetragrammaton to the squares. According to these attributions, so are certain astrological, tarot, geomantic, and Hebrew symbols referred to the squares.

It will be remembered that in attributing the letters of the name to the Great Cross, we subdivided the latter into groups or blocks of three squares each. Every block was attributed to some one letter of Tetragrammaton. Now the signs of the zodiac are to be attributed to the Great Cross, and each of those twelve signs is to be referred to three squares constituting one group or block. The order of their attribution is governed by the letters of the Great Name already referred to the arms of the Great Cross. For instance, fiery signs (Aries, Leo, and Sagittarius) are attributed to Yod. Watery signs (Cancer, Scorpio, and Pisces) are attributed to Heh. Airy signs (Gemini, Libra, Aquarius) are attributed to Vau. Earthy signs (Taurus, Virgo, and Capricorn) are attributed to Heh final.

Thus each group of three squares, constituting a single unit, is attributed to one sign of the zodiac, depending upon the letter of the name referred to that group. Each zodiacal sign, being divisible into three decanates, or divisions of ten degrees, it follows that each of three decanates of the sign may be referred to one of the squares in any group of three squares. The sign refers to the group, the decan refers to one square of that group.

The rule governing the attributions of the twelve signs to the Great Cross is: the four Kerubic or fixed signs (Taurus, Leo, Scorpio, and Aquarius) are referred to the squares of the Linea Spiritus Sancti. The four cardinal signs (Aries, Cancer, Libra, and Capricorn) are referred to the left side of the Linea Dei Patris Filiique, and the four mutable signs (Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius and Pisces) to the right side of the Linea Dei Patris Filiique.

The decanate system as employed by the Order will be found in the part of this book dealing with the significance of the tarot cards. They begin with the attribution of the first decanate of Aries to the planet Mars, and ending with the last decanate of Pisces also ruled by Mars. The order of planets for the decanates follows the order of Sephiroth on the Tree of Life: Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sol, Venus, Mercury, and Luna.

There are thirty-six small cards of the tarot, as explained in the appropriate documents, attributed to the decanates of the twelve signs. Therefore to each of the decanate squares on the Great Cross will be attributed one of the small cards of the tarot. Two, three, and four of each of the four suits of tarot are referred to cardinal signs. Five, six, and seven to the Kerubic or fixed signs; and eight, nine, and ten to the mutable signs. Thus in the air tablet, the Great Cross shows the tarot and decanate attributions as shown.

Great Cross of the Air Tablet

The attribution of the Sephiroth to the ten squares of the Sephirotic Cross is shown on the admission badge to the twenty-seventh Path of Peh, and reproduced in one of the knowledge lectures.² The planetary attributions to the Sephirotic Cross as used in the Enochian system are rather different from those used on the Tree of Life. But the system that is here employed is constant, and applies to each of the sixteen Sephirotic Crosses on the four tablets.

In this mode of attributing the planets to the Sephiroth on the Calvary Cross of the lesser angles, Saturn is excluded, and Jupiter and the tarot trump, the Wheel of Fortune, is attributed to Kether. The title of this card is “the Lord of the Forces of Life,” and Kether is the origin and source of life.

To Chokmah is attributed Mercury, the tarot key, the Magician, “the Magus of Power,” seeing that Chokmah is the distributor of the power from Kether, even as Mercury is the messenger of Jupiter of classical mythology.

To Binah is referred the moon, and the tarot key “the Priestess of the Silver Star,” even as Binah is the completer of the triad of the supernals, and as it were High Priestess to the inferior Sephiroth. (Compare also, says S.R.M.D., the position of the path of Gimel in the Tree of Life.)

To Chesed, Venus, and the key of the Empress, “the Daughter of the Mighty Ones.” Chesed is, as it were, the first of the inferiors below Binah, and the path of Venus is thus reciprocal between Chokmah and Binah, forming, as it were, the base of the triangle of the supernals.

To Geburah, Mars, and the tarot key of the Blasted Tower, “the Lord of the Hosts of the Mighty,” even as Geburah represents strength and fiery power.

To Tiphareth is the sun, “the Lord of the Fire of the World,” even as Tiphareth is, as it were, the heart and centre of the sun of life.

The remaining four squares of the Sephirotic Cross have no planetary or astrological attributions. The ten squares of the Sephirotic Cross also stand for the Ace and small cards of the suit represented by the element of the lesser angle. Thus wands are attributed to the fire angle, pentacles to the earth angle, etc.

The Kerubic squares are allotted, as their name implies, to the four Kerubim whose emblems follow the order of the letters of Tetragrammaton:

Yod	Heh
Lion—Leo	Eagle—Scorpio
King	Queen
Vau	Heh (final)
Man—Aquarius	Bull—Taurus
Prince	Princess

These last are of the suit corresponding to the element of the lesser angle as explained above, viz: wands to fire and Yod; cups to water and Heh; swords to air and Vau; pentacles to earth and Heh final.

It was previously shown how the squares of the servient part of each lesser angle were given a double attribution to the letters of the name. They were seen to be ruled by a letter governing the rank and also by a letter governing the column. In order to work out the astrological attributions of this allocation, note that the columns go by the triplicity of the Kerubic square at the top, the ranks by quality. By this method there results a highly intricate and ingenious subdivision of elements in the sub-elements of the lesser angles.

Yod and fire are referred to the cardinal signs, Aries, Cancer, Libra, and Capricorn.

Heh and water are referred to the kerubic or fixed signs, Taurus, Leo, Scorpio, and Aquarius.

Vau and air are referred to the mutable signs, Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius, and Pisces.

Heh final and earth are referred to the elements, fire, water, air, and earth.

As to the reasons of this latter attribution, S.R.M.D. says that the four cardinal signs are called the most fiery because most solar in nature. That is, the equinoxes and solstices occur when the sun is in these signs. The Kerubic or fixed signs are considered watery because they are the most shining and glittering in nature. The remaining four mutable signs are called the most airy because they are the most subtle in nature; while the four elements are the most earthy because their operation is mainly terrestrial. Incidentally, instead of the usual earth symbol, the planet Saturn is used in the Enochian system, because, to quote S.R.M.D., “though one of the seven lords who wander (planets), Saturn is yet here classed with those who abide because he is the heaviest of the seven and thus formeth a link between the Wanderers and Abiders.”

The following diagram shows how any lesser angle may be worked out using the above rules:

☿	♏	♄	♁	♊
☾	♂	☉	♀	♂
♌	♈	7	♋	♉
☿	♏	8	♌	♊
♍	♈	9	♏	♎
♅	♈	10	♎	♈

Earth Angle of Water Tablet

One final set of attributions concerns the Tablet of Union, which is referred to spirit. It is employed, as before shown, in binding together the tablets, and in building up angelic names. Its attributions are to the four Aces of the elements and to the court cards. The Aces represent the root force, and the essential spiritual noumenon of the element. The court cards are the vicegerents of the root force in the element.

	Ace of Swords	Prince of Swords	Queen of Swords	Princess of Swords	King of Swords
	Ace of Cups	Prince of Cups	Queen of Cups	Princess of Cups	King of Cups
	Ace of Pentacles	Prince of Pentacles	Queen of Pentacles	Princess of Pentacles	King of Pentacles
	Ace of Wands	Prince of Wands	Queen of Wands	Princess of Wands	King of Wands

Elemental Correspondences of Court Cards

The foregoing methods of attributing the Enochian squares should be completely grasped before proceeding further. It is imperative to understand thoroughly the basic principles of attributions before beginning the analysis of the pyramids based on each square. What follows will have little meaning if the reader has not worked out these references and attributions for himself.

The following diagram shows the letters of Tetragrammaton attributed to the four Enochian tablets in detail. The figures refer to the order of reading the Hebrew letters, but must under no circumstances be confused with the order of the angelic names on the tablets, which always read from left to right.

Attribution of the Great Name to the Lesser Angles

In the $4^{\text{xox}} = 7^{\text{xhx}}$ grade the admission badge for the twenty-eighth Path was a pyramid. It was described as having a square base and four sides composed of equilateral triangles cut off so as to leave a flat top. These four sides were attributed to the four elements, and the flat top was conceived to be the throne of Eth, the spirit. Hitherto, the squares of the Enochian tablets have been treated as a single whole and as being flat. In reality, however, they are represented as being pyramids like that described above. The practical magical significance of this will be shown hereafter, but for the moment we must consider the method of producing the sides of these pyramids, and their attributions. With the exception of the Tetragrammaton letter, upon which everything else depends, all the other attributions appear and are included in the definition of the nature of the pyramid. Each side of the pyramid is coloured according to its own appropriate element, or left white for spirit. It by no means follows for example that a square from the airy angle of air will build up a completely yellow pyramid. But every square of the air tablet, in every angle, has at least one airy yellow side to its pyramid. Every square of the airy angle of all four tablets has at least one airy side.

On a flat surface, the pyramid is represented by dividing the square into four triangles, leaving a small square in the centre to mark the flat top. On this, if desired, the appropriate Enochian letter may be placed. The following will be the standard of reference, so that later should mention be made of triangle number two, the following diagram will show its position.

Pyramid of Four Triangles

The pyramid is supposed to be in position on the tablet, so that triangle number two points to the top of the tablet. To work out the pyramid of any square completely, it is necessary to know the attributions of the four triangles and the element of each. Since every tablet comprises four distinct divisions, each of these must be considered separately as each produces a different type of pyramid. The rules for analysing the pyramid based on the squares will be concisely put thus:

Great Cross

Triangle No. 1. Sign of zodiac, small card of tarot.

Triangle No. 2. Spirit.

Triangle No. 3. Planet of decan.

Triangle No. 4. Elemental symbol of the tablet.

Note that triangle number two on the squares of the Great Cross is always spirit, as indicating the operation of the spirit in the primary element, and is shown white. Triangle number four is coloured according to the element of the tablet; thus red for fire tablet, blue for water, black for earth, yellow for air. Triangle number one is to be coloured according to the triplicity of the sign attributed to it, that is as to whether it is of an earthy, fiery, watery, or airy nature. Triangle number three is to be coloured in that of the element ruled by the planet attributed to it. The rule governing the latter is:

Sun and Jupiter rule the element of fire.

Saturn and Mercury rule the element of air.

Venus and moon rule the element of earth.

Mars rules the element of water.

On the other hand, there are alternative methods, the use of which calls into operation other forces than elemental. Thus the colour of number one may be in the colour of the sign itself, as red for Aries, and blue for Sagittarius, etc. Triangle number three may also be coloured in the colour of the planet itself, orange for the sun, green for Venus, etc. If these latter are used, planetary and zodiacal forces would be inferred in lieu of purely elemental ones. The former, however, may be found to be the most practicable for most circumstances.

The method of applying these rules to the Great Cross may be seen in the following, consisting of the three left hand squares of the Linea Spiritus Sancti of the air tablet, showing the pyramids formed from the squares of the letters ORO:

Pyramids of ORO

Sephirotic Cross

Triangle No. 1. Elemental emblem of tablet.

Triangle No. 2. Emblem of Spirit.

Triangle No. 3. Elemental emblem of lesser angle.

Triangle No. 4. Sephirah. Letter of Tetragrammaton. Tarot card.

Colouring: No. 1, colour of the element of tablet. No. 2, always white. No. 3, elemental colour of lesser angle. No. 4, either white for Spirit, or in colour of Sephirah.

Kerubic Squares of the Lesser Angles

Triangle No. 1. Tarot card of lesser angle.

Triangle No. 2. Elemental emblem of tablet.

Triangle No. 3. Kerubic symbol answering to letter of Name.

Triangle No. 4. Elemental emblem of lesser angle.

No. 1 will agree with the colouring of No. 3 always. That is, the colour will be that of the element of the court card corresponding to the Kerub. No. 2 shows the elemental colour of the tablet. No. 4, elemental colour of the lesser angle.

Servient Squares

Triangle No. 1. Element of great tablet with astrological attribution.

Triangle No. 2. Elemental emblem of letter ruling the column with tarot trump.

Triangle No. 3. Elemental emblem of lesser angle with geomantic figure.

Triangle No. 4. Elemental emblem of letter ruling rank with Hebrew letter corresponding to tarot trump in triangle No. 2.

The colouring of these triangles is the simplest because it follows its elemental emblem. It has not been mentioned before, but it is the rule, when drawing or painting these pyramids and triangles, to paint the symbols on the appropriate sides in complementary colours. Thus, to take triangle No. 1 of a servient square in the water angle of water, the colour will be blue to refer to the element of the tablet as a whole, while the appropriate astrological attribution will be painted on it in orange. This rule applies to all the squares.

The method sounds highly complex, but in practice it is much easier than it sounds. In fact, it takes far less time to work out a square than to describe the method.

Tablet of Union

Triangle No. 1. Element of column. (Spirit in first column).

Triangles No. 2 and No. 4. Always Spirit.

Triangle No. 3. Element of rank.

The colours of each of the triangles are clearly indicated.

I append below examples of the above, so that there may be no difficulty at all in understanding how this procedure obtains. Consider the earth lesser angle of the earth tablet; the servient square in rank Vau and column Vau. The column is ruled by Vau, attributed to air, therefore the astrological symbol will be an airy sign. The rank is ruled by Vau, therefore the symbol will be mutable air, Gemini. The tarot key for Gemini is the Lovers. The Hebrew letter attributed to it is Zayin. The geomantic attribution is Albus.

Take the water tablet, air angle, column Heh, rank Yod. The column is ruled by Heh which is attributed to water. Therefore the astrological symbol will be a watery sign.

The rank is ruled by Yod, therefore the symbol will be cardinal or fiery water—Cancer.

The tarot key for Cancer is the Chariot.

The Hebrew letter for Cancer is Cheth.

The geomantic attribution is Populus.

The following is by S.R.M.D. “Briefly, regarding the pronunciation of the angelical language, thou shalt pronounce the consonants with the vowel following in the nomenclature of the same letter in the Hebrew alphabet. For example, in Beth, the vowel following ‘B’ is ‘e’ pronounced AY. Therefore, if ‘B’ in an angelic name precede another as in ‘Sobha,’ thou mayest pronounce it ‘Sobeh-hah.’ ‘G’ may be either Gimel or Jimel (as the Arabs do call it) following whether it be hard or soft. This is the ancient Egyptian use, whereof the Hebrew is but a copy, and that many times a faulty copy, save in the divine and mystical names, and some other things.

“Also ‘Y’ and ‘I’ are similar, also ‘V’ and ‘U,’ depending whether the use intended be vowel or consonant. ‘X’ is the ancient Egyptian power of Samekh; but there be some ordinary Hebrew Names wherein ‘X’ is made Tzaddi.”

From one ritual written by S.A., we find the following given as to the pronunciation of names.

“In pronouncing the names, take each letter separately. M is pronounced Em; N is pronounced En (also Nu, since in Hebrew the vowel following the equivalent letter Nun is ‘u’); A is Ah; P is Peh; S is Ess; D is Deh.

“NRFM is pronounced En-Ra-Ef-Em or En-Ar-Ef-Em. ZIZA is pronounced Zod-ee-zod-ah. ADRE is Ah-deh-reh or Ah-deh-er-reh. TAASD is Teh-ah-ah-ess-deh. AIAOAI is Ah-ee-ah-oh-ah-ee. BDOPA is Beh-deh-oh-peh-ah. BANAA is Beh-ah-en-ah-ah. BITOM is Beh-ee-to-em or Beh-ee-teh-oo-em. NANTA is En-ah-en-tah. HCOMA is Heh-co-em-ah. EXARP is Eh-ex-ar-peh.”

S.R.M.D. calls attention, in the document “S,” to some rather interesting, that is to say, suggestive, correspondences. It is to be noted that the number of squares in the vertical line of the Great Cross, that is in the Linea Dei Patris Filiique, will be twenty-six, which answers to the gematria or number of YHVH. Also the number of points in the geomantic symbols referred to the Kerubim, Fortuna Major to Leo, Rubeus to Scorpio, Tristitia to Aquarius, and Amissio to Taurus, are also twenty-six in number. The ten squares remaining on the horizontal bar of the Great Cross, that is five on each side of the descending column, and not considering the two squares on the centre where the shafts cross, will refer to the Ten Sephiroth. And the first three letters of those squares will symbolize the triad of the supernals operating through the Quadrangle.

Looking at the horizontal line again, and considering its full quota of twelve squares, instead of ten as before, then since they are divided into a three, a four, and a five—as in OIP TEAA PDOCE—they may be said to symbolize the triad of the supernals, the tetrad of the elements, and the pentagram. Again, in the commencing triad of the Linea Spiritus Sancti of each tablet, it may be said that:

ORO will be symbolical of the voice of the Man Kerub.

MPH will be symbolical of the cry of the Eagle Kerub.

MOR will be symbolical of the low of the Bull Kerub.

OIP will be symbolical of the roar of the Lion Kerub.

There are various ways of looking at the pyramids prior to undertaking the practical work of using them as the symbol for skrying in the spirit-vision. S.R.M.D. suggests a useful mode of meditation which elaborates in a most illuminating way the ordinary attributions. He says: “Thou mayest regard the upper triangle (No. 2) as representing a force acting downwards. The lower triangle (No. 4) as a force striving upwards. The left hand triangle (No. 1) as acting horizontally from left to right, and the right hand triangle (No. 3) as a force acting from right to left. While the centre will be the common force. Thus:

Directions of Force in Enochian Pyramids

Though this may sound wholly incomprehensible at first, a little reflection on the nature of the movement of these forces yields a wealth of ideas. S.R.M.D. provides a few examples at hazard of this analysis, and I quote them as follows:

“The square of ‘A’ of Exarp in the Tablet of Union.

Triangle No. 1. Queen of Swords.

Triangle No. 2. Spirit.

Triangle No. 3. Air.

Triangle No. 4. Spirit.

“Nearly all the squares of this tablet represent some combined effect of light and life. Here spirit acts both downwards and upwards. Air is not very strong in action when it is here placed; and the Queen of Swords represents the moist force of air, Heh of Vau. Therefore, if one could attribute a direct material action unto the squares of the Tablet of Union, the terrestrial effect would be that of a moist and gentle, scarcely moving, breeze; with a soft vibrating light playing through it, like the most gentle sheet-lightning in summer.”

It will aid the reader considerably if, when meditating upon these examples, he draws the pyramid with the triangles so that he can refer to it at a moment’s notice.

“The square ‘H’ of ‘MPH’ in the Great Cross of the water tablet.

Triangle No. 1. Seven of Cups.

Triangle No. 2. Spirit.

Triangle No. 3. Venus.

Triangle No. 4. Water.

“Here the action of water is extremely passive, Scorpio, representing especially still water, and Venus has her quiet action still more intensified. Therefore, were it not for the action of spirit, the effect would be rather evil than good, representing deception, and well summed up in the Seven of Cups,

“the Lord of Illusionary Success.” But the action of the spirit makes it mild and beneficent. A gentle, peaceful force.

“The Square ‘O’ of ‘OMEBB’ in the Sephirotic Cross of the water lesser angle of the water tablet.

Triangle No. 1. Water.

Triangle No. 2. Spirit.

Triangle No. 3. Water.

Triangle No. 4. Geburah.

“Here water is extremely strong, and is stirred to action by the energy of Geburah. Were it not for the spirit it would be the destroying energy of a flood, but the latter renders its effect more gentle and beneficent, promoting the solution and nourishment of matter.

“The square ‘M’ of ‘AISMT,’ a Kerubic square of the fiery lesser angle of the earth tablet.

Triangle No. 1. Queen of Wands.

Triangle No. 2. Earth.

Triangle No. 3. Eagle Kerub. Water.

Triangle No. 4. Fire.

“Here earth acting downwards and fire upwards, the effect would be volcanic. The water is as strongly placed as the fire, rendering it explosive, though helping to stifle the fire by its union with the earth. The Queen of Wands equals the water of fire, Heh of Yod, reconciling these two elements. Therefore the whole effect would be to produce a moist generating heat, like that of a conservatory, or rather of a hothouse. A force intensely excitant and generative and productive. The earth force of the tropics.”

“The servient square ‘R’ of ‘BRAP’ in the watery lesser angle of the fire tablet.

Triangle No. 1. Virgo. Fire.

Triangle No. 2. Earth.

Triangle No. 3. Water. Conjunctio.

Triangle No. 4. Air.

“Here water is in the strongest place, but otherwise the force of the square is somewhat different to the former, from the influence of air in the lowest triangle. The effect will then be that somewhat of lands—fertile indeed, but ultimating its harvest, and therefore not nearly as excitantly generative as in the former square. And the land of Virgo as usually described will be a very fair representation thereof.”

The following statements concerning aspects of the philosophy underlying the Enochian tablets are also written by G.H. Frater S.R.M.D. Some of them are very profound and the student will do well if he gives them a good deal of attention—especially in connection with the idea of the projection of the Tree of Life into a solid sphere and forming five pillars. This part of the Enochian teaching is taken from a manuscript entitled “X. The Book of the Concourse of the Forces. Binding together the Powers of the Squares in the Terrestrial Quadrangles of Enoch.”

“Each of these terrestrial tablets of the elements is divided into four lesser angles by the great Central Cross which cometh forth as from the gate of the Watchtower of the element itself. The horizontal line of each of these four Great Crosses is named ‘Linea Spiritus Sancti.’ The perpendicular is called ‘Linea Dei,’ the Line of God the Father and Son, the ‘Patris Filii,’ Macroprosopus and Microprosopus combined. For these four vertical lines resemble four mighty pillars each divided into twain by a light line shewing this forth; the Father himself, in the absence of the line. And in its presence shewing the Son.

“As aforesaid the central points of these four Great Crosses do shew in the celestial heavens, and do correspond unto the four Tiphareth points referred to in the Book of the Astronomic View of the tarot. Naturally then the Linea Spiritus Sancti coincides with the zodiacal belt wherein is the path of the sun who is the administrant of the spirit of life, and “the Lord of the Fire of the World.” The four Linea S.S. then form the complete circle of the Ecliptic, a circle at the centre of the zodiacal circle.

“It is demonstrated in the tarot manuscripts that when the ten Sephiroth in their grouping which is called the Tree of Life are projected in a sphere (Kether coinciding with the North Pole, Malkuth coinciding with the South Pole, the pillar of Mildness with the axis) then the pillars of Severity and of Mercy are quadrupled, i.e., there are five pillars instead of three pillars.

“The same scheme is therefore applicable to the celestial heavens, and the mode of the governance of these tablets in the heavens is also set forth in the tarot manuscripts. But as before and as there is said, the rule of these four tablets, terrestrial as well as in the heavens, is in the spaces between the four pillars. That is, between the double pillars of Severity and Mercy. In these vast spaces at the ends of the universe are these tablets placed as watchtowers, and therein is their dominion limited on either side by the Sephirotic pillars, and having the great central cross of each tablet coinciding with one of the four Tiphareth points in the celestial heavens. Therefore even in the small squares into which each tablet is divided, each represents a vast area of dominion, having the correlation thereof in the universe, in the planets, in our Earth, in the fixed stars, and even in man, in animals, vegetables, and minerals.

“Therefore do the four perpendicular or vertical lines of the four crosses represent four great currents of force passing between north above and south below, intersecting the Tiphareth points and thus affirming the existence of the hidden central pillar of the Tree of Life forming the axis of the sphere of the celestial heavens.

“Therefore are these lines which are vertical called ‘Linea Dei Patris Filii,’ as manifesting that central column wherein are Kether and Tiphareth, Macroprosopus and Microprosopus.

“The Calvary Cross of ten squares which are in each of the four lesser angles of each tablet are attributed unto the action of the spirit through the ten Sephiroth herein. This cross of ten squares is the admission badge of the twenty-seventh Path leading unto the grade of Philosophus, the only grade of the First Order in which all the tablets are shewn. It represents the Sephiroth in balanced disposition, before which the Formless and Void roll back. It is the form of the opened out double cube and altar of incense. Therefore it is placed to rule each of the lesser angles of each tablet.

“A knowledge of these tablets will then, if complete, afford an understanding of the laws which govern the whole creation. The dominion of the Tablet of Union is above that of the four terrestrial tablets and towards the north of the universe.

“Of the letters on the tablets, some be written as capitals. These are the initial letters of certain angels’ names drawn forth by another method, not now explained, and the offices of these do not concern a Zelator Adeptus Minor. Some squares have more than one letter. In these cases, either letter characterizes the square. The higher one is preferable. The lower is weaker. If two letters are side by side, the presumption is in favour of equality. Where two letters are in one square, the best plan is to employ both. But one alone may be used with effect.

“Of the difference between these mystical names of the angels of the tablets and the Hebrew names such as Kerub, Auriel, and Michael, etc. Those Hebrew angel names which have been taught unto the First Order are rather general than particular, attending especially to an office or rule whereunto such an angel is allotted. As it is written: ‘One angel does not undertake two messages.’ For these mighty angels do rather shew forth their power in the governance of the four great Sephirotic columns as aforesaid, viz: the double columns of Severity and Mercy when projected in a sphere, and this also is under the presidency of the Sephiroth. But the names of the angels of the Enochian tablets do rather express particular adaptations of forces shewing forth all variations and diverse combinations of those which are in the other case manifested in a more general way.”

It will be found written in the Clavicula Tabularum Enochi:³ “Now we are to understand that there are four angel overseers.... Each one of these angels is a mighty prince, a mighty angel of the Lord and they are of Him. They are as chief watchmen and overseers, set over several and respective parts of the world, viz: east, west, north, south, as under the Almighty, their governor, protector, defender. And the seals and authority of whom are confirmed in the beginning of the world. To whom belong four characters, being tokens of the Son of God, by whom all things are made in the creation, and are the natural marks of his holiness.”

Now thou shalt observe that in the Book of the Concourse of the Forces, a sign is annexed unto each of the four tablets of the elements. That is, unto the tablet of air, a symbol of a T having four Yods above it.⁴

Unto the tablet of water a cross potent,⁵ having two letters b. b., a figure 4, and a figure 6 in the angles thereof.

Unto the tablet of earth, a simple cross potent without additions.

Unto the fire tablet there is a circle having twelve rays. These be the sacred seals or characters alluded to in the preceding quotation. Thou shalt know that these four seals be taken from the Sigillum Dei Æmeth, after and according unto a certain guidance of letters which is there set forth. This “Liber Æmeth sive Sigillum Dei” that is the Book of Truth or the Seal of God entereth not into the knowledge of a Zelator Adeptus Minor.

From these four sigils there are four names drawn forth. From the Tau with four Yods or

T of the Sigillum Æmeth, T and 4 other letters are obtained, counting by the rule of 4

4

(from the T which is found at the top of the circle of letters and numbers on the Sigillum Dei Æmeth), thus:

4.	22.	20.	18.	l.	og.
T	h	a	o	8

This yields the name Tahaoelog for the air tablet.⁶

From b.4. 6.b. grouped about a cross, (note that T equals t, the cross equals th), is obtained: cross to h, then b.4., then 6.b., and continue 6:

4.	22.	b.	y.	6.	6.	a.	t.	14.	n.
Th	h	4	14	b	A	5	9	n.

yielding the name Thahebyobeaatanun for the water tablet.⁷

From the plain cross, which equals Th 4, proceed counting in each case forward as by numbers given:

4.	22.	11.	a.	o.	t.	h.
Th	h	A	5	10	11

yielding the name Tahaaothe for the earth tablet.⁸

From the twelve rayed circle, we begin with the middle circle on the Sigillum, the Greek Omega, the long o, and proceed counting 12 in each case, for the number of rays is 12 around the circle:

6.		o.	o.	22.	H.	6.	t.	n.
W.	h.	8.	17.	o.	12.	A.	9.

which yields Ohooohaatan for the fire tablet.⁹

These names are not to be lightly pronounced.

Note by Israel Regardie

Some remark obviously is required for the above. First, the Sigillum Dei Æmeth is part of the very complex system worked out by Dee and Kelly. No mention of it is made in any of the official Order teachings for the grade of Zelator Adeptus Minor other than the above. I have, through meditative and British Museum research, obtained a good deal of information about this Sigillum and associated “Enochiana,” but have decided to withhold publication for the time being since this volume is intended to reproduce veridical Order teachings and not the result of personal research. The names yielded by the analysis of the sigils are to be considered as the elemental kings of the entire tablet. There should be no confusion between the nature and function of the king whose name is derived from the whorl in the centre of the Great Cross, and the elemental king whose name is implicit in the sigil. The king of the quarter bearing the banners of the names of God is planetary in nature, representing rather the operation of the divine spirit through the element and its four sub-elements. Whereas the king whose name is derived from the sigil is a powerful elemental force. His operation is essentially elemental, and his nature is elemental, and he does not represent in any way the operation of the spirit. That is not to say that he is an evil force. On the contrary; but it is purely and intrinsically an elemental force and as such should be handled by invocation with great care.

Part Two: The Sphynxes and the Pyramids

The keys of the governance and combinations of the squares of the tablets. They are the sphynx and the pyramid of Egypt; that is, the combination of the Kerubs being the sphynx. The combination of the elements being the pyramid.

Now learn a mystery of the wisdom of Egypt: “When the sphynx and the pyramid are united, thou hast the formulae of the magic of nature.

“These are the keys of the wisdom of all time; and its beginning—who knoweth it? In their keeping are the sacred mysteries and the knowledge of magic and all the gods.”

In the ritual of the thirty-second Path leading unto the Theoricus grade, it is thus written: “The sphynx of Egypt spake and said: I am the synthesis of the elemental forces. I am also the symbol of man. I am life. I am death. I am the child of the night of time.”

The solid pyramid of the elements again is the admission badge of the twenty-eighth Path leading to the Philosophus grade. It is attributed to the four elements. Therefore on its base is the word Olahm, meaning “world,” and upon its sides are the names of the elements: Aesh, Ruach, Mayim, Aretz or Ophir. Yet the apex is not allowed to remain vacant, nor quite acute in shape, but is cut off and so a small square is formed at the apex, and the letters Eth, meaning “essence,” are placed therein.

This small square maketh of the pyramid a certain throne or shrine. On this throne a certain ruling force is seated. Within the throne is a sacred symbol. Place then within each pyramid its appropriate sphinx, and the image of its god above. Take thou each pyramid as the key of the nature of each tablet square. The sphinx of each will vary in form according to the proportion of the elements comprising the square. The god of Egypt, whose image is to be placed above each pyramid, shall represent the force ruling under the direction of the great angel of the square.¹⁰ This god shall be the symbol of the power of the light acting therein, as the angel shall be the descent of that light itself. The angelic name may be typified by the correspondences of the four letters of the angel’s name, adding AL to the name—the letters of the name standing for head, bust, arms, body, and lower limbs, etc., as taught in the instruction on telesmatic images. Place the name in Theban or Enochian letters on the girdle.

The four forms of the Sphynx are:

The bull.....wingless

The eagle or hawk.....winged

The angel or man.....winged

The lion.....wingless

This variation as to wings is another reason why, in grouping the tablets and the lesser angles of the same, the two forms of air and water are placed above the two tablets of earth and fire.

From the pyramid of the square, the symbolic form of each sphinx is formed thus: The upmost of the four triangles (triangle No. 2) sheweth the head and neck, and in the case of the angel or eagle, it shows whether wings are to be added to the form of the sphinx. The two triangles right and left (triangles No. 1 and 3) show the body with the arms or forelimbs here also. If angel or eagle there are wings added unto the representation of the figure. The lowest triangle (No. 4) adds the lower limbs, and the tail of the bull, eagle, and lion.

When air and fire predominate there is a male tendency. When water and earth, the type tendeth to female.

It is to be understood that what is here written regarding the sphinx of the pyramid and the god of Egypt ruling above is applicable especially unto the sixteen squares of the servient angels in each lesser angle.

Concerning the skrying of the squares servient in the spirit vision. Have in readiness the necessary implements and insignia; also let the Zelator Adeptus Minor have before him the symbol of the pyramid of the square. Rehearse the angelic calls appropriate thereunto and, having invoked the appropriate names governing the plane and division thereof in question, let the Z.A.M. imagine unto himself that he is enclosed within that pyramid. Or let him believe that he is voluntarily standing within an atmosphere corresponding unto that symbolized by the pyramid of the square, whether of heat or moisture, of cold or dryness, or of combinations of these.

Let him then endeavour to follow the ray therefrom unto the limits of the macrocosmic world and to find himself in a scene corresponding unto the nature of the pyramid square. That is, either of landscape or clouds or water or fire or ether, vapour or mist or raying light or a combination or combinations of these, according unto the nature of the plane.

For the pyramids of the squares are not solid pyramids of brick or stone built by the hand of man. But rather the symbolical representation of the elemental formula governing the plane of that particular sphere.

Having arrived at the plane required, let the Z.A.M. invoke the god of Egypt who ruleth above the pyramid by the power of the angel of the sphere—the name formed by adding the appropriate Tablet of Union letter to the angel's name. At the same time, vibrate the Egyptian (Coptic) name of the god or goddess, whereby he shall perceive before him the colossal symbolic form of the god or goddess. Let him again use the angelic formulae, and test it by the power of symbols and signs. If it abide these tests, thus showing it is a true image, then let him request it to make manifest before him the sphinx of its power.

This shall also appear in a colossal figure and shape, and should be tested by the proper formula. He shall continue his invocations until he can behold it clearly, even invoking the angel of the plane by the superior names, and by the god of Egypt. Also let him vibrate the name of the angel, invoking it by its own name, and by the knowledge of its symbolic (telesmatic) image, the sphinx and by the name of the god of Egypt, and by his own particular symbolic form, according to the formula of the square. Thus therefore in this manner only—if thou wishest to escape from delusion—shalt thou be able to discern truly, by skrying, the nature of the plane and of its operation. Standing before the sphynx, and saluting it with the proper signs, and invoking the god of Egypt by his proper and true names, thou shalt ask by the virtue and power of those symbols and names for the knowledge of the operations and influences of that plane. Thou shalt ask concerning the special attributes of that vast portion of the confines of the universe included in that sphere, its varying nature, its elemental nature; its inhabitants, elemental and spiritual, etc.; the operation of its rays through the greater world, that is, the universe; of its influence upon this particular planet, upon animals, plants, minerals, and lastly upon man the microcosm.

And when thou shalt have obtained all this reflect that even then it is but a small part of the knowledge of the wisdom of the formulae contained in the plane—even of that one square.

Notes by Frater S.R.M.D.

For quick working, make sixteen plain triangles; four red, four blue, four yellow, and four black.

Make also Kerubic figures. A red lion, a black bull, a blue eagle, a yellow angel.¹¹ Divide each into three, the centre piece being halved by a horizontal cut. From these make composite sphinxes to lay under the pyramid.¹²

Make small Egyptian gods to place above the pyramid.¹³

Make a shallow inverted pyramid of cardboard. Fill the sides as required with the coloured triangles to represent the several squares. Let the pyramid be shallow enough to show all four sides at once.

These be the gods of Egypt who rule above the pyramids of the sixteen servient angels and squares of each lesser angle. In the middle of each pyramid is the sphinx of its power. Revere then the sacred symbols of the gods, for they are the word manifested in the voice of nature. These be the Elohim of the forces of the eternal, and before their faces the forces of nature are prostrate.¹⁴

In order to show something of the nature of these Enochian pyramids as revealed by skrying therein with the spirit-vision, I have thought it advisable to include here two or three examples of simple visions obtained by members of the old Order. These are provided only as instances of the procedure and results to be obtained. Under no circumstances should the student permit his own skrying researches to be influenced and moulded by these visions. He must not attempt to make his own accounts of the nature of the pyramids accord with those given here. The technique alone should be noted, and the manner of applying tests—but nothing further than that should be used in actual practice.

Images of the Egyptian Gods

1. “A vision of the ‘N’ square in the airy lesser angle of the water tablet. The full name is nhdD, and the pyramid god is Ahephi.

“Having recited the fourth and tenth Enochian calls, and invoked the angelic names of the tablet of water, and the airy angle, I was carried up by the gentle moving waves of warm moist air, through which I could see bright blue sky with greyish white clouds moving across rapidly. I rose in the air till I found myself on a vast sandy plain, on the right little vegetation, on the left a broad river with trees and grass on its banks. A cool breeze was blowing from the river across the plain, and seemed to refresh the green after the heat of the day.

“I called on Ahephi to appear and the form gradually filled the place till the scene disappeared altogether. Tested by the letters, it grew immensely larger, and seemed to have a yellow and blue striped nemyss, whitish wrappings, with broad blue bands round it, and a greenish yellow light shown about it. I gave the L.V.X. signs and asked to be shown the sphinx of its power. This gradually appeared through the yellow light behind the godform, human head, very fair and bright face, wings, yellow and blue nemyss, claws of eagle extended in front, and hind legs and tail of a lion in reclining position.

“On asking for the action of the force of the square, was shown a bubble of water into which air was continually pouring, and expanding it till it burst and disappeared, the energy seeming then to pass into other forms and come under the rule of another square. It seemed a transitory action, more the initiator of fresh conditions than an end in itself. I asked its effect on the earth, and was taken to the scene I had left, and saw again how the moist breeze from the river gave fresh life to the vegetation which had flagged during the day. Asking its effect on the animal world, I was shown a deer standing by a lake. A current of force passing over it, seemed to bring the dawn of reason and glimmering of consciousness, the first conscious stirrings of an animal. Acting on man, it seemed to affect the brain, producing a vague waving motion which prevented fixity of thought and definiteness of idea, loss of the power of concentration.

“I then asked to see the elementals of the plane, and saw numbers of small-sized human figures, fair, active expression on face, bodies rather solid-looking compared to the head, large wings like dragon flies which were iridescent and seemed to reflect the colouring of things about them.

“I gave the $5^{xox} = 6^{xhx}$ signs to the sphinx and then called on the angel of the square. I saw above the god the figure I had drawn—the wings on the crown were blue, the cuirass bright steel with the eagle symbol on the breast in gold, the drapery below was a yellowish green, and the feet bare.”

2. “A vision of the square ‘I’ of the earthy lesser angle of the tablet of air. Name 1Sha. Anoubi is the pyramid god.

“This atmosphere was damp and cold. I stood on the summit of a mountain, cloud-enwrapped, and there, having rehearsed the angelical calls, and vibrated the names, I beheld the colossal form of Anubis, who, after a time, shewed me the sphinx of his power. This again shewed me a mighty angel who answered my signs, and when in that of the Theoricus I saw that a brilliant ray descended into the outstretched palm of each of her hands. On my asking for guidance and information, she gave me one of these rays, which I beheld as a crystal cord whose other end rested in the Eternal. The angel led me first among the ethers, and after a space I beheld stars and worlds innumerable.

“Through the brighter suns, particles passed—coming out the other side as blackened cinders. Then came forth a mighty hand which gathered these cinders and welded them into a mass, lifeless and vast. Then we passed to this earth—to a frigid scene, all snow and huge blocks of ice. The cold was intense, but I felt it not. Here were polar bears, and seals, as also many sea gulls. In places, the ice was stationary but again it was violently moved, block crashing against block with deafening roar. The inhabitants of the place were small and bloodless, wrapped chiefly in the skins of polar bears.

“The influence of this square on man makes him violently impetuous in the absence of difficulty, but instantly hopeless in the face of an obstacle, abandoning at once every project. The elementals are demure, birdlike creatures with semi-human faces. The spiritual beings are beautiful diaphanous angels, light brown in colour, with sweet, serious faces. They were all much occupied when I saw them. Some had silver in their left hands and mercury in their right, which they would put into a golden vessel together, whence came immediately a pale gold coloured flame which ever increased in size, spreading out through the worlds. Others bearing the legend 'Solve et Coagula' woven into their belts, mixed water and the principle of cold which they bore in a pair of scales, and the union was the ice of the region we were in. I was wondering whether all this had any counterpart in human nature, and its possibilities of development when I saw two types. One an ancient man toiling along most painfully, and the other a child skipping along light-heartedly. As they faded there rose between them a radiant figure clad in gold, bearing on her brow the sign Libra in living emerald. Then I understood that only in and by the reconciliation of these two forces, the fixed and the volatile, is 'the pathway of true equilibrium' found. On asking for plants I was shown mushrooms, which seemed to be particularly consonant to this square."

3. "A vision of the square 'C' in the watery lesser angle of the air tablet. Name: CPao. Hoorpokrati, the pyramid god.

"Read the third and seventh Calls. Vibrated Oro Ibah Aozpi, Bataivah, the angel CPao. The Egyptian god is Hoorpokrati.

"Found myself in the air in the midst of whirling clouds. Travelled on by the above names. Saw the angel of colossal size clothed in white. Tested with a letter Tau and Beth placed over the form, but there was no change, so removed those letters. Clouds seemed to be floating around the angel. Saluted with L.V.X. signs and asked to see Egyptian god, who appeared equally colossal while the angel floated up above his head. Tested as before.

"Vibrated Hoorpokrati second time, saluted as before, and asked to see the sphinx, both angel and Harpocrates returning the saluting sign. Sphinx then appeared with eagle head, lower part human, on one side eagle's wings, the other side human arms. Tested and saluted as before. The sphinx was of colossal size.

"Now I vibrated all the names repeatedly, and asked to see the meaning of the square. I was told that it was the astral region of storm and rain clouds with wind. I saw elementals in grey or pearly robes floating on the white fleecy clouds.¹⁵ On dark thunderclouds were forms in dark lurid grey raiment, bearing thunderbolts like the images attributed to Zeus; many eagle-headed forms among them. Presently I saw one with a crown. I asked him to show me, and he took me by the hand and we traversed an enormous distance beyond the earth which became invisible. Then we soared upwards still in the midst of the same surroundings, till I saw the sun of that region, shining brightly, but clouds frequently drifting across it, while the clouds were now below us but only partially so. He told me that the nature of this square was to supply the forces on the astral plane which generate wind, rain, clouds, and storm on the natural plane. That these occurred throughout the universe but with different effect. That on our evil planet the effect was sometimes disastrous, being perverted from their original intention by our evil sphere. But on other higher planes the effect was always beneficial, clearing away that which had fulfilled its purpose and replacing it by fresh influence. The region attributed to this square seemed simply limitless. We traversed an enormous distance, yet seemed no nearer the end. So he brought me back again. Then I thanked him and saluted him, and descended to the former plane. There I thanked and saluted the angel, Hoorpokrati, and the sphinx. So I returned home, dimly seeing my natural body before reentering it.”

FURTHER RULES FOR PRACTICE

By G.H. Frater Sapere Aude

1. Prepare for private use four tablets with correct lettering, as given in the official lecture, and a Tablet of Union.
2. Make the four tablets coloured as brilliantly and as flashingly as possible, and in exact proportion. This should be done with coloured papers. They may be done in watercolours, but this is not so good.¹⁶
3. The four minor implements are to be used with the Enochian tablets. A small altar should be arranged in the room at the time of working. It should be draped with a black cloth, with a lighted candle by the wand, incense burning by the dagger, gold and silver or bread and salt with the pentacle, and water in the cup.

4. Use the ritual of the hexagram for the invocation of the king and the six seniors.

5. Use the ritual of the pentagram for the spirit and the four elements.

6. The Calvary Cross names call forth with a word of six letters and command with a word of five. They rule the lesser angles in which they are situated, and should be used in the preliminary invocation.

7. The six seniors and kings are on a higher plane and should be invoked with the hexagram ritual. The names of the six seniors are each of seven letters, that of the king eight.

8. The deity names consist of a name of three letters, four letters, and five letters respectively, corresponding to the supernal triad, I.A.O. Also to the triad of YHVH, Yeheshuah, Yehovashah.

9. The name of the king and the letters from the centres of the great Central Crosses initiate the whirl, and should not be used by those who do not understand its action.

10. Remember that the east is attributed to air, south to fire, west to water, north to earth, when you summon spirits or forces. When, however, you go to seek spirits or forces on their own planes, the attribution of the elements to the cardinal points is as in the zodiac, as follows: east to fire, south to earth, west to air, north to water.

11. Bearing this in mind, place yourself (imaginatively) in the centre of a hollow cube, standing in the centre of the Tablet of Union between the O of HCOMA and the second N of NANTA:

E	X	A	R	P
H	C	O	M	A x
N	A	N	T	A
B	I	T	O	M

Now imagine the four elemental tablets standing round you like the four walls of a room, that is, at the four cardinal points. This is subjective working.

12. Another method is to imagine a moonstone spheroid, containing the universe, yourself standing as it were, at first, in the centre, and the Tablet of Union at the North and South Poles. At the same time divide the surface into four quarters and imagine yourself outside the spheroid. This is objective working.

13. These tablets can be applied to the universe, to the solar system, to the earth, or to man himself. "As above, so below."

14. Perhaps the most convenient method for a beginner to adopt is to apply this scheme to the earth, treating the three deity names as the three signs of the zodiac in one quarter. For example, take the fire tablet and place OIP on the sign Leo, TEAA in Virgo, and PDOCE in Libra. And so on with the other god names, treating the Kerubic sign as the point de départ, one quarter of a house in astrology being roughly equal to the square of each letter.

Each of these spaces, under these circumstances, would appear to be governed by a heroic figure of, say, twelve feet high, not winged. But the spirit names and the names above the Calvary Cross, even on the earth plane, bring forth figures of tremendous size and beauty, which could easily lift a human being in the palm of the hand. From the fiery lesser angle of fire, I have seen AZODIZOD, the figure being fiery red with flaming wings and hair of emerald green. ZODAZODEE, black and white, flashing and flaming. EEZODAHZOD, blue and orange, with a mist of flame about him. ZODEEZODAH, orange, with hazy gold wings like gold gauze, and nets of gold around him.

Having selected one of the above methods, let the Zelator Adeptus Minor perform the lesser banishing rituals with the sword. Invoke, with the minor implement, the element required.

Our example being the square of OMDI, a watery and earthy square in the lesser angle of earth in the great southern quadrangle or fire tablet, we take the fire wand. In the four quarters we invoke, with the equilibrating pentagram for actives, and the fire pentagram, using only the tablet names: “EDELPERNAA, (the great king of the south). VOLEXDO and SIODA, (the two deity names on the Sephirotic Calvary Cross). I command ye in the divine name OIP TEAA PEDOCE and BITOM that the angel who governs the watery and earthy square of OMDI shall obey my behest and submit to me when I utter the holy name OOMDI (pronounced Oh-Oh-Meh-Deh-ee).”

Having repeated this invocation in the four quarters, turn to the east if you wish to go to the plane or to the south if you wish to invoke the spirits to come to you. Look at the painted tablet which you have prepared until you can carry it in your mind, then close the eyes and vibrate the name OMDI and OOMDI until your whole body trembles and you almost feel a sensation of burning.¹⁷

Then pass through the tablets and try to see some sort of landscape. My experience of this particular plane was a dull red crumbling earth. I first found myself in a cave. As a symbol I was told that this square of OMDI was like the roots of a tiger lily; the square MDIO to the right, representing the life working in it. The square IOMD to the left, represented the sap flowing through the stalk and the leaves, as it were; the square DIOM to the left of that, the orange flower with the black spots upon it, fitly representing air, fire, and earth—yellow, red, and black.

Afterwards I invoked the king and six seniors to explain the general bearings of the quadrangle. After passing through several fiery planes, each of them of greater whiteness and brilliance than the last, I seemed to be stationed on a high tower situated in the centre of the quadrangle between the two a's in the centre of the Great Cross, and I was told by the six seniors that they were partly representative of the planets, but that their names should really be read in a circle, in a way we should be taught later, etc.

Final note. From the lectures circulated among the adepts,¹⁸ I have gathered that the angels placed over the Kerubic squares of the lesser angles of the great quadrangle have the following properties:

Air angle. “Knitting together and destruction.” Centrifugal and centripetal forces. Expansive and contractive, etc.

Water angle. “Moving from place to place.” Motion, vibration, changing of forms.

Earth angle. “Mechanical crafts.” Creative or productive of results on the material plane.

Fire angle. “Secrets of humanity.” Controlling human nature, clear vision, etc.

And that the subservient angels of these angles, that is the angels of the sixteen servient squares under the Sephirotic Cross, rule:

Air angle. “Elixirs.” Purification from illusions, diseases, sins, etc. by sublimation.

Water angle. “Metals.” the right methods of polarizing the soul so as to attract the L.V.X.

Earth angle. “Stones.” The fixing of the higher self in the purified body.

Fire angle. “Transmutations.” The consecration of the body and the transmutation brought about by consecration.

Note by Israel Regardie: It is to be noted that the lesser angles in each quadrangle have identical properties and qualities differing only according to the primary element of the tablet in which they are situated. That is, the lesser angle of air in the air quadrangle will be very similar in nature to the lesser angle of air in the water tablet, or the earth and fire tablets; and that the only difference between them will be in the nature of their particular quadrangle. The lesser angle of air is said to be concerned with “physic” or healing. The use of the lesser angle of air in the fire tablet would have to be for quite different objects and purposes than for example the air lesser angle of the earth tablet. And so for the other lesser angles in the primary elements.

Part Three: The Forty-Eight Angelical Keys or Calls

These calls or keys which follow are only to be made use of with the greatest care and solemnity, especially if they be pronounced in the angelical language as given. Anyone profaning them by using them with an impure mind, and without a due knowledge of their attribution and application, shall be liable to bring serious spiritual and physical harm unto himself.

The first nineteen calls or keys, of which eighteen alone are expressed, are attributed unto, and to be used with, the Tablet of Union and the four other terrestrial Enochian tablets.

The First Key hath no number and cannot be expressed, seeing that it is of the Godhead. And therefore it hath the number of 0 with us, though in the angelic orders it is called first. Therefore, their second key is with us the first.

Unto the Tablet of Union are attributed six calls, of which the first is the highest and above the other five. The remaining twelve calls, together with four of those belonging unto the Tablet of Union, are allotted unto the four tablets of the elements.

The First Key governeth generally, that is as a whole, the Tablet of Union. It is to be used first in all invocations of the angels of that tablet but not at all in the invocations of the angels of the other four tablets.

The Second Key is to be used as an invocation of the angels of the letters E.H.N.B. representing the especial governance of the spirit in the Tablet of Union. It is also to precede in the second place all invocations of the angels of that tablet. Like the First Key it is not to be employed in the invocations of the angels of the four other tablets.

(The numbers such as 456 and 6739, etc., which occur in some of the calls contain mysteries which are not here to be explained.)

The next four keys or calls are used both in the invocations of the angels of the Tablet of Union, and in those of the angels of the four terrestrial tablets as well. Thus:

The Third Key is to be used for the invocation of the angels of the letters of the line EXARP, for those of the air tablet as a whole, and for the lesser angle of this tablet which is that of the element itself—air of air.

The Fourth Key is to be used for the invocation of the angels of the letters of the line HCOMA, for those of the water tablet as a whole, and for the lesser angle of this tablet—water of water.

The Fifth Key is to be used for the invocation of the angels of the letters of the line NANTA, for those of the tablet of earth as a whole, and for the lesser angle of this tablet—earth of earth.

The Sixth Key is to be used for the invocation of the angels of the letters of the line BITOM, for those of the tablet of fire as a whole, and for the lesser angle of this tablet—fire of fire.

This finishes the employment of the keys of the Tablet of Union. The remaining twelve keys refer to the remaining lesser angles of the four terrestrial tablets, as hereafter set forth in the following table.

Enochian Keys or Calls

Key	First Words	Government
1st	I reign over you, saith the God of justice.	Tablet of Union as a whole
2nd	Can the wings of the winds understand your voices of wonder?	E.H.N.B.
3rd	Behold, saith your God, I am a circle, on whose hands stand twelve kingdoms.	EXARP and tablet of air; IDOIGO and air of air.
4th	I have set my feet in the south and have looked about me; saying:	HCOMA and tablet of water; NELAPR and water of water.
5th	The mighty sounds have entered into the third angle.	NANTA and tablet of earth; CABALPT and earth of earth
6th	The spirits of the fourth angle are nine, mighty in the firmament of waters.	BITOM and tablet of fire; RZIONR and fire of fire
7th	The east is a house of virgins singing praises amongst the flames of first glory.	Water of air; LILACZA
8th		Earth of air; AIAOAI

	The mid-day, the first, is as the third heaven made of hyacinthine pillars.
9th	A mighty guard of fire with two-edged swords flaming:	Fire of air; AOUVRRZ
10th	The thunders of judgment and wrath are numbered, and are harboured in the north	Air of water; OBLGOTCA in the likeness of an oak.
11th	The mighty seats groaned aloud and there were five thunders which flew into the east.	Earth of water; MALADI
12th	O you that reign in the south and are 28, the lanterns of sorrow.	Fire of water; IAAASD
13th	O you swords of the south which have 42 eyes to stir up the wrath of sin.	Air of earth; ANGPOI
14th	O you sons of fury, the children of the just which sit upon 24 seats.	Water of earth; ANAEEM
Key	First Words	Government
15th	O thou, the governor of the first flame, under whose wings are 6739 which weave.	Fire of earth; OSPMNIR
16th	O thou, second flame, the house of justice, which hast thy beginnings in glory.	Air of fire; NOALMR
17th	O thou third flame, whose wings are thorns to stir up vexation:	Water of fire; VADALI
18th	O thou mighty light, and burning flame of comfort.	Earth of fire; UVOLBXDO

Wherefore unto the tablet of air are attributed the Third, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Keys. Unto the tablet of water, the Fourth, Tenth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Keys. Unto the tablet of earth, the Fifth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Keys. And unto the tablet of fire, the Sixth, Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Keys.

So that, to invoke, for example, the angels of the line NANTA of the Tablet of Union, thou shalt first read the First and Second Keys, and then the Fifth Key, and then employ the necessary names.

And to invoke the angels of the lesser angle IDOIGO, air angle of the tablet of air, thou shalt read the Third Key only, and then employ the necessary names.

But to invoke the angels of the lesser angle VADALI, water angle of the tablet of fire, thou shalt first read the Sixth Key, and then the Seventeenth Key, and after that use the necessary names. Whereas, for the angle of fire of fire therein, the Sixth Key alone would suffice, as also for the king and angelical seniors of that tablet.

And so of the other angles of the other tablets, these rules shall suffice.

Now, though these Calls are thus to be employed to aid thee in the skrying of the tablets in the spirit vision, and in magical working therewith, yet shalt thou know that they be allotted unto a much higher plane than the operation of the tablets in the Assiatic world. And, therefore, are they thus employed in bringing the higher light and the all-potent forces into action herein; and so also, are they not to be profaned, or used lightly with an impure or frivolous mind as before said.

Also these Calls may be employed in the invocation of the chiefs of the elementals according to the title of the Book “T” associated therewith. And in this case, it will be well to employ the names of the archangels Michael, Raphael, etc., and their inferiors. And thou shalt understand that these Hebrew names are more general as representing offices, while those of the angelic tablets are more particular as representing natures.

The Calls or Keys of the thirty aethers be all one in form, only that the particular name of the aether in question is employed, such as ARN, ZAA, etc.

These first eighteen Calls are in reality nineteen—that is, nineteen in the celestial orders, but with us, that first table hath no Call and can have no Call seeing it is of the Godhead.

Thus, then, with us it hath the number of “0,” though with them, that of “1” (even as the first key of the tarot is numbered “0”); and therefore, that which is with us the Eighteenth Key, is with them the nineteenth.

After these first eighteen, follow the Calls and Keys of the Aires or Thirty Aethers, which are the same in substance, though varied by the name belonging thereto.

Part Four: Enochian or Rosicrucian Chess

This is one of the subdivisions of the angelic system of tablets about which, sad to say, very little can be said. No one in the Order, or my temple, seemed to know anything about it. Whether this same condition applies to the other temples is hard to say, though, from conversation with certain of the adepts of those temples, I gather the same conditions there prevailed. Nothing that was of practical value, as throwing any light on the nature and function of the game, was thrown on the subject by any of the Order members within the sphere of my acquaintance. It is probable that the knowledge of this system died with the early members. All that I ever heard were fulsome praises of its remarkable divinatory capacity, together with quite a few amusing comments by those who manifestly knew nothing about it, though no precise indication was conveyed as to its procedure. On two of three occasions I have asked adepti of the rank of $7^{xox} = 4^{xhx}$ to play a game with me using my chess pieces and boards though each politely backed out of the invitation. Also the unmounted state of the Order chess pieces was a clear indication that they had never and could never have been employed—like other aspects of the Order teaching. And the actual documents on the subject that were shown to me were vague and obviously incomplete, giving no indication as to the true nature of this matter. No doubt it was intended, by those who wrote the papers and devised the system, that the adept should apply his own ingenuity to the bare bones provided of the game, and formulate from that skeleton outline, as from the Enochian tablets themselves, a complete system of initiation, and a profound magical philosophy. It is not therefore my intention to say very much about Rosicrucian chess, although it can be stated that the perspicacious student will divine ideas of great import and discover a depth of magical significance hidden under the cloak of an apparently trivial game.

However, the student who has mastered the foregoing sections of the Book of the Concourse of the Forces will no doubt be able to divine the relationship existing between the profundities of the Enochian tablets and this chess game. It will have been necessary as a preliminary step to have become perfectly familiar with the attributions of the squares, so that any pyramid can be built up instantaneously in the imagination too. By this, I mean, that while playing a chess game, the movement of a piece from one square to another should provide much material for thought, for the squares on the boards, as on the tablets, may be formulated as pyramids. Some experience, also, in employing the pyramids for skrying in the spirit vision will be required before any real appreciation of Enochian chess can be acquired.

In this game, the pieces are Egyptian godforms, and the boards are certain adaptations of the Enochian tablets. The Tablet of Union, however, is not used. Tablets are reproduced as chessboards minus the Great Central Cross, the Sephirotic Cross, and the Kerubic squares over the Calvary Cross in each lesser angle. This leaves only the servient squares in each of the four lesser angles—sixteen in number, which gives us sixty-four squares per board—the number of squares in the ordinary chessboard.

One of the papers written by Greatly Honoured Frater N.O.M. gives a short history of chess as it was derived from the Indian Chaturanga, the Persian Shatranji, and the Arabic chess. But since it contains very little that is of any practical import, I have thought better not to include it.

A few words now as to the nature of the boards. The boards consist of the purely elemental part of each tablet. There is nothing in the symbolic structure of the board to suggest the operation of the spirit in any of its aspects through the elements. This operation of the spirit and its potencies, however, is indicated not by the squares, but by the pieces and their movements over the board.

To be of any real magical value, the board should be a sort of talisman or flashing tablet. That is, it should be fully painted, showing all the triangles of the pyramids as brightly and as flashingly as possible. The little flat squares shown at the summit of the pyramid, indicating the throne of the godform, are not necessary on these boards. The triangles are completely formed, and the resulting pyramidal shape is not truncated. The four angles of each tablet will thus stand out quite brightly, since the elemental colour of the quarter will show its nature, even though the triangles of yellow, blue, black, and red will jostle each other cheek by jowl. When fully painted, the board is most impressive as a flashing tablet. The student may know he has done his work properly when there appear white flashings at the angles of the squares. This is important, for the object of a flashing tablet is to attract an appropriate type of force. And if these chessboards are made as flashing tablets, they will automatically attract force and their utilization will become the more significant. In brief, each square is, as it were, the name and symbolic address of a different angelic force. The flashing squares will attract the commencement of the operation of that type of angelic power, and the movement of the chess godforms over the squares may produce even brighter flashes and indicate the operation of the divine forces therein. With these hints the student is left to work this out for himself.

There will be, in short, four different boards. Each is representative of one of the four quadrangles or watchtowers of the elements, and the angelic names on the latter will be implied on the boards even although no letters or names are painted on them. The use of any of the four boards will depend upon particular purposes, and the attributions of elements as in the diverse schemes of divination will determine which of the four boards must be used at any given time. In tarot, the element of air, the sword suit, indicates sickness and sorrow and unhappiness generally. Hence, in Enochian chess, for divining for some such question as touches upon trouble or unhappiness the air board would be employed. The fire board will represent the tarot suit of wands, implying swiftness, energy, activity. The water board indicates the tarot suit of cups of pleasure, happiness, merry-making, and marriage. The earth board will refer to all material plane matters of money, work, employment, occupation, and so forth.

The four boards of the Rosicrucian game, although different, nevertheless agree in certain particulars. In each board it is convenient to speak of the arrangement of the lesser angles as an upper and lower rank—air and water forming the upper rank and earth and fire the lower.

It is evident that the columns of the one rank are continuous with those of the other; and in this continuity a certain regular rule is observable. Every column of eight squares commencing in the upper rank is continued below by a column of the opposite element.

Thus the fiery columns below invariably stand on the watery columns; the watery on the fiery; the airy on the earthy; and the earthy on the airy.

A different arrangement of the horizontal files or ranks of squares is observable, and there is a difference in the upper and lower tablets.

In the upper tablets the Kerubic rank of squares is continuous with the elemental rank; and the cardinal is continuous with the common sign rank, whereas in the lower tablets of earth and fire the various ranks—Kerubic, cardinal, etc., are continuous right across the board.

The pieces employed are, as previously remarked, Egyptian godforms. A full set of chess pieces numbers twenty men and sixteen pawns. (Note the possible relationship of the thirty-six pieces to the thirty-six decanate cards of the tarot.) The game is played by four players, representing the four lesser angles of the board, thus giving each player one set of five pieces and four pawns. The five pieces represent the operation of the spirit and four elemental rulers—the five points of the pentagram, the five letters of YHShVH, and the tarot Ace and court cards. The pawns are their servants or vice-gerents. Strictly to be in order, each of the twenty principal pieces represents a different godform, thus:

Fire set:

King—Kneph

Knight—Ra

Queen—Sati-Ashtoreth

Bishop—Toum

Castle—Anouke

Air set:

King—Socharis

Knight—Seb

Queen—Knousou Pekht

Bishop—Shu Zoan

Castle—Tharpeshest

Water set:

King—Ptah

Knight—Sebek

Queen—Thouerist

Bishop—Hapimon

Castle—Shooeu-tha-ist

Earth set:

King—Osiris

Knight—Horus

Queen—Isis

Bishop—Aroueris

Castle—Nephthys.

However, this tends to confusion, creating in practice far too complex a game. It will be found that four sets of the same five godforms will suffice. There are only five major godforms, the others being variations or different aspects of those types. These are:

Osiris, bearing crook, scourge, phoenix wand. He is represented as sitting on a throne, silent and unmoving. He is the king and represents spirit, the operation of the Great Cross in the tablets. He corresponds to the Ace in tarot, the root-force of any element.

Horus, a god with hawk's head, double mitre, and standing upright, as though to stride forward. He is the knight of Enochian chess and represents the operation of the ten-squared Sephirotic Cross in the fire angle of any tablet or board, and corresponds to the king in the tarot, the figure astride a horse.

Isis, an enthroned goddess with a throne symbol mounted on the vulture headdress. In Rosicrucian chess, Isis is the queen, and represents the operation of the Sephirotic Cross in the water angle of any tablet. She corresponds to the tarot queen who is shown seated on a throne.

Aroueris, a human shaped god, with a double mitre. He is the bishop in Enochian chess, and his form is that of a standing figure, to indicate his swift action. He represents the operation of the Sephirotic Cross in the airy angle of any tablet, and represents the prince or knight of the tarot—the figure driving a chariot.

Nephthys, a goddess with an altar or crescent symbol above the vulture headdress. She is the castle or rook of the chess game. This piece is always represented as somewhat larger than the others, and is enclosed within a rectangular frame, within which she is enthroned. Her office is the representation of the operation of the Sephirotic Cross in the earth angle of any tablet, and represents the Princess or Knave of the tarot —the amazon figure who stands alone.

These are the five principal forms used for each of the four angles of the board. Some difference should be made in the tone of the colouring of the front or face of the piece to indicate its angle on the board. Coloured bands may suffice for this purpose. Moreover the back of the piece—for it is customary to use flat pieces, not round as in ordinary chess—should be painted in the appropriate colour of the element it represents so as to avoid confusion in the recognition of its power. Thus the back of the king, an Osiris form, should be painted white to represent spirit, and this rule applies to all four kings in the four angles. The knight, Horus, should be coloured red. The queen, Isis, should be blue; the bishop, Aroueris, yellow, and the castle, Nephthys, should be black and set in a large frame. Each piece should be cut about three inches high.

For practical use, these pieces should be mounted on square wooden bases, and those bases painted in different colours. It will be by the bases that their place on the board may be recognized. For example, there are four sets of chess pieces to be set out in the four corners of the board. Each piece is more or less like its corresponding piece in some one of the other corners. The pieces placed in the air quarter of the board, therefore, will be mounted on yellow bases. Those in the water angle will have blue bases. The pieces in the earth angle will have black bases, and those in the fire quarter will have red bases. Thus, as in the four angelic tablets, there results a minute subdivision of the sub-elements of the tablet. There will be an Osiris piece, a king with a white back, on a yellow base, indicating that he is a king belonging to the air angle. He represents the sub-element of spirit of air, the most spiritual and subtle phase of that element, the tarot Ace of Swords. A king with a blue base indicates his place in the watery angle. A queen, an Isis figure with a blue back, set on a red base, shows that she is the queen of the fire angle, representing the watery aspect of the fire sub-element of any tablet, the Queen of Wands. A bishop, yellow backed, mounted on a black base, shows that he belongs to the earth angle, as against a bishop with a yellow base whose place is in the air angle and who, therefore, corresponds to the Prince of Swords in the tarot pack. And so for the rest.

With but one or two slight exceptions, the pieces move exactly as do the corresponding pieces in chess. The queen here does not have the full liberty of the board as she does normally, nor is she the most powerful piece on the board. Here she can only move to every third square. This she can make in any direction, horizontally, vertically, or diagonally—but only three squares at any time. She can leap over intervening squares, and take pieces on the third square from wherever she stands. The other exception is that no castling is permitted.

The pawns in this Enochian chess represent the godforms of the four sons of Horus, the Canopic gods. Their attributions are:

Fire	Kabexnuv, mummy-shaped, hawk-headed, the knight's pawn.
Water	Tmoumathph, mummy-shaped, dog-headed, the queen's pawn.
Air	Ahephi, mummy-shaped, ape-headed, the bishop's pawn.
Earth	Ameshet, mummy-shaped, human-headed, the castle's pawn.

The same rule for colouring the other pieces applies to the pawns. Their backs should be painted in the colour of the piece they serve. Thus the back of the knight's pawn will be painted the colour of the knight, red. The base will be coloured according to the lesser angle in which it is placed. So that in each of the four angles you will have four pawns on bases in the colour of its sub-element. The airy angle, for example, will have four pawns mounted on yellow bases. Those pawns will have four different coloured backs to indicate the piece, and therefore the element, which they represent and serve.

The pawn moves only one square at a time, and not two for the first move as in modern chess. The rule of en passant does not apply here, although the regular method of taking with pawn, via the diagonal, either to right or left, holds equally well.

It will be noted that the king has no pawn. Since he is Osiris, the other four pieces and their pawns are his personal servants and vice-gerents. His place on the board is always on the corner of the lesser angle, where the corresponding letters of Tetragrammaton would be placed on the Angelic Tablets. On the four corners of the board as a whole, therefore, will be found the four kings. Identical in every way, they yet differ in the colour of their bases, the colour of the angle which they rule. Some variation might be made as to the posture of the god. For instance, the fire king could be cut as a standing figure, the water king sitting, and so forth. Let it be noted that on the corner squares, two pieces will always be found. The king and the piece corresponding to the letter of the angle will occupy the same square.

A piece or pawn threatening, that is giving check, to the corner square also checks the king as well as whatever other piece happens to be upon that square.

In setting up the pieces for play, the rule of Tetragrammaton on the Kerubic square of the tablets, has application. That is, the order in which the letters of the name YHVVH are placed on the uppermost squares of the servient squares of any lesser angle, as reflected from the Kerubic squares above, also govern the placing of the pieces. The bishop will be placed on the Vau square, the queen on the Heh square, the castle on the Heh final square, etc. The student who has thoroughly assimilated the principles involved in the attributions of the Enochian tablets will find all this perfectly straightforward, and experience no difficulty herein.

With regard to this injunction to set out the pieces on the board following the prime player's setting, whose chessmen are arranged according to the order of Kerubs, note that the remaining three sets of pieces are arranged, on any board, exactly in that order regardless of the order of Kerubs in their angle. That is to say, if the prime player chooses an earth or water setting, his pieces will be set out: king and castle on the corner square, then follow the knight, queen, and bishop. The other three sets of air, water, and fire pieces on that board, are set out precisely in that order, either horizontally or vertically as the case may be.

It thus follows that there may result sixteen possible arrangements of pieces. That is, since there are four Kerubic ranks on each board, and there being four separate boards, the chess pieces may be arranged on the board in sixteen different settings. The reason for any particular setting—if divination is the motive for play—must depend on the prime player's synthetic grasp of the Order teaching. Let him remember that there are sixteen figures of geomancy, each with a special and specific divinatory value. It should be remembered that these geomantic figures are each under the influence of a zodiacal genius and a planetary ruler. Not only so, but each is attributed to a Hebrew letter, therefore to a corresponding tarot trump, with its allocation to a sign and a constellation in the heavens with all the hierarchical ideas that the latter implies. Thus the playing of this game resumes the whole philosophy of magic.

The prime player must be guided in his selection of boards not only by choice of element as previously described, but by any one of these sixteen root significations of geomancy. For each one of these sixteen figures may be applied to the sixteen lesser angles of the Enochian tablets and chessboards. So that each angle comes under the operation of a geomantic ruler and genius, and under the dominion of that portion of the starry heavens corresponding to its tarot trump. The method of attributing the figures to the angles is identical with the process described for the squares of both columns and ranks in the lesser angles. Thus the airy lesser angle of the air chessboard would be mutable (airy) air, referred to the zodiacal sign Gemini, and hence to the geomantic figure of Albus, which is a Mercurial figure under the presidency of Taphthartharath. The watery angle of the air tablet would be Kerubic or fixed (watery) air, which is the sign Aquarius, and the geomantic figure of Tristitia, attributed also to Saturn, and the ruler over it is Zazel. The earthy angles of the air tablet is elemental air, referred to the geomantic figure of Fortuna Minor, also a solar or Leo figure, ruled by Sorath. The fiery angle is cardinal air, the zodiacal sign of Libra, and Puella would be the geomantic figure, with a Venusian nature, ruled by Kedemel.

The same principle is involved in allocating the geomantic figures to the other tablets and angles. The magical and divinatory value of the geomantic figures must therefore decide the choice of chessboards and lesser angle settings.

The yellow and red men are so placed that they advance to the attack of the black and the blue respectively by the columns, while the latter advance by the ranks. That is, the actives are shown as a vertical force, while the passives are shown as operating horizontally, shewing the cross of life, corresponding to the forces of the court cards and the zodiacal trumps in the tarot.

The central squares of the board contain the sixteen signs that are allotted to each lesser angle. And it is only from these sixteen squares that the pieces—except the rook and the king—develop their full influence or defensive force.

The watery and airy boards are counterparts of each other, so far as the arrangement of the signs, etc., of the squares are concerned. And the same is true as regards the earth and fire boards. Every board has its uppermost and lowermost ranks of the passive or female element; and its two central ranks are of the active or male element.

The most striking difference between the air and water, and the earth and fire, boards is in the fact that in the former the ranks are broken; whereas in the latter they are not only continuous across each board, but they are continuous right across both boards when in situ. To this is due the greater balance and evenness seen in the play of the pieces in the lower boards.

4. Note by JMG: See color insert page 20, for the Sigils of the Angelic Tablets.
5. Note by JMG: A term out of heraldry. A cross potent is a cross with splayed ends.
6. Note by Frater N.O.M., that is, W. Wynn Westcott: The fourth square each time from the last will show the letter and figure given. You are not to count, say, 22 or 20 or 18, but 4 only.
7. Note by N.O.M.: Four moves from T gives 22.h. b.4. is specially put. y.14 moves to 22 from t. Then 6.b. is special. From 6.b. it is all plain moving by 6 to right.
8. Note by S.A., that is, W. Wynn Westcott again: Count here not by four or six, but by numbers given. To right if over, to left if under.
9. Note by S.A.: Count twelve in every case, neglecting the numbers over or under, always forward.
10. Note by Regardie: That is, under the name formed by the addition of a letter from the Tablet of Union.
11. Note by Regardie: These should be made all about the same height and width, so that when they are cut, the separate pieces may be pieced together—as in a jigsaw puzzle—in different combinations, without there being too great a discrepancy in size.
12. Note by Regardie: The sphinx in this instance becomes a synthetic Kerubic figure. Thus you can make a sphinx with the head of a lion, the shoulders and wings of an eagle, the body of a man, and the hind legs and tail of a bull, etc.
13. Note by Regardie: When drawing these godforms if a little tongue is left at the bottom of the cardboard on which the form is painted, that tongue can be fitted very easily into a slot of about the same size at the top or throne of the pyramid.
14. Note by Regardie: It is perhaps hardly necessary to suggest to the student that he should not attempt to employ the sphinx and godform formula with the pyramid until he has had much experience in ordinary tattwa vision. When he has become perfectly acquainted with the nature of the subtle planes, and has learned to apply the simple forms of tests, so that he is quick to detect imposition or deception, then he may skry in the planes symbolized by the pyramids.
15. Note by D.D.C.F.: I get them greyer and less defined.
16. Note by Regardie: Enamel or lacquer paints are best.
17. Note by S.A.: The items which follow are quite open to discussion and are simply my own personal experience.

OFFICIAL RITUAL

The correct application of the action of the moveable images (representing the motion of the ruling angels over the servient squares)

is called the Playe or Raying of the Chequers of the Tablets.

By G.H. Frater D.D.C.F.

Of the Chess King and the Tarot Ace. The move of this piece is one square every way, and answereth to the action of the spirit. Wherever it goeth, it commenceth and initiateth a fresh current, whence it is represented by the motion of only one square in any direction and there staying for this purpose before moving onward. So that his action is not hurried, but represents a balanced movement. Yet in his beginning of action is he at first a mute force, as though throned upon the water; as in the end of his action he is a life manifested and throned upon the earth. And herein is a mystery of the Lord Aeshoori (Osiris) when enthroned between Isis and Nephthys, thus representing the beginning and end of the action of Him in whom end and beginning are not, but rather concealment and then manifestation. Herein is a great mystery of life, for his thrones are not in the two active elements, seeing that these latter are his horse and chariot of transition in the passage from concealment into manifestation. This piece, then, is the symbolizer of the action of the potencies of the crosses on the servient squares.

Of the Chess Knight, the Tarot King. The move of this piece is three squares cornerwise every way (as in ordinary chess) and representeth the leaping action of the flickering flame. Wherefore also is he not stopped in his course by a piece or an intervening square, even as fire seizing on a matter speedily rendereth it transparent. This piece representeth the action of fire as the revealer of the strength of the spirit, even as Hoor is the avenger of Aeshoori. It is a force potent and terrible, the king in the elemental operations.

Thus it openeth the locked doors of matter and sheweth forth the treasure hidden therein. Therefore hath all life its beginnings in a fire celestial. And the number of squares covered by the move of the knight in the midst of the board (reckoning from the square on which he standeth, but not including it) is sixteen squares, of which eight are checked, and eight are passed over.

Of the Chess Queen, the Tarot Queen. The move of this piece is unto every third square from her (reckoning the square whereon she standeth as the first) as well cornerwise, as well perpendicular, as horizontal. Thus again covering sixteen squares out of a square of twenty-five squares, of which eight are threatened, and eight are passed over. But she threateneth not a piece upon the intervening square of her move. And her movement is as that of the waves of the sea, and (like the Knight) she is not hindered in her motion by a piece on an intervening square. This piece representeth the undulating action of water and of the sea, and she is ascribed unto the great goddess Isis, who is the cherisher of life.

Of the Chess Bishop or Fool, the Tarot Prince. The move of this piece is any number of squares cornerwise (that is, only on the diagonal) in any direction even unto the limits of the tablet. He representeth the keen and swift wind, and he is ascribed unto the god Aroueris. He is stopped by any piece in his way, even as the wind is stopped by a material barrier. He representeth the swift vehicle of the spirit.

Of the Chess Castle or Rook, the Tarot Princess or Knave. The move of this piece representeth the ponderous and formidable force of Earth and its motion is any number of squares in a square direction, perpendicular or horizontal (but not cornerwise) even unto the limits of the board. It is ascribed unto Nephthys the goddess. It representeth the completed action of the spirit in matter. Therefore is its movement square, and also stopped by intervening pieces, yet powerful from the length and breadth of its range.

Of the Pawns. The four pawns represent certain forces formed by the conjunction of the spirit with each of the four elements severally, and they are severally ascribed unto Ameshet, Ahephi, Tmoumathph, and Kabexnuv, who stand before the face of Aeshoori. And their movement is but one square forward, perpendicular, and they threaten one square forward diagonal on each side, thus formulating the symbol of the triangle, for they each represent a mixture of three elements under the presidency of the spirit. Therefore each is, as it were, the servant of the god or goddess before whom he standeth. Yet they be all, in a manner, alike in their action, although their lords be different. Each is the servant of the god or goddess whose element is expressed in his symbol, without its contrary.

In each set of three elements, taken together, two must be contrary. Wherefore, for example, Ameshet, who represents water, fire, and earth, is the servant of Nephthys, whose element earth is expressed in this attribution without the contrary of air.

Ahephi, who represents air, fire, and water, is the servant of Aroueris, whose attribution is air.

Tmoumathph, who represents water, air, and earth, is the servant of Isis, whose attribution is water.

Kabexnuv, who represents fire, air, and earth, is the servant of Horus, whose attribution is fire.

One of the rules concerning the pawns in actual play is that should one reach the eighth square of its column, it may be exchanged for the piece of which it is vice-gerent. That is, as in ordinary chess, a pawn which reaches the eighth square may be exchanged for any piece the player desires—but in Enochian chess the exchange is limited by the elemental attributions of the pieces. So that were an Ahephi pawn, the servant of Aroueris, to survive the battle of the entire game and win through to the top of the board, it could be exchanged for a bishop, even though the bishop were untaken and still on the board. And so with the others.

The opening of chess play is known under the technical title of “Awakening the Abodes.” As already stated the game is set for four players, each of whom works the pieces at each of the four angles, playing in rotation. Should the game be used for the purposes of divination, the first player would be the querent, the one asking the question, or the person representing the matter about which information is required. This first player chooses which angle of the board he will play from, bearing in mind the divinatory qualities of the elements as set forth in the documents on geomancy and tarot.

The major difference between Enochian chess and the modern game is that in the former, when using it for divinatory purposes, the moves are decided by the throwing of a dice. Depending upon the number disclosed by the dice, so must a certain piece be moved, for the numbers are attributed to pieces. The actual details of the move—that is whether to right or left, backwards or forwards, to take an opponent or to press forward—are quite obviously left to the personal ingenuity and divining mind of the player. The dice only determines specifically that such and such a piece shall be played.

The prime mover, or the owner of the Ptah piece, plays first, and his first move is to be decided by the throw of the dice to indicate which piece or pawn he must first play. Each player follows in rotation, deosil, that is round the board with the sun from the prime player. First the prime player moves, and if his setting is air, then follow the water pieces, the fire pieces, the earth pieces, and then back again to the air who is the prime mover.

The actual attributions of the numbers on the dice to the Enochian chess pieces are as follows:

If the player throws:

1. He moves a king or any pawn.
2. He moves a knight.
3. He moves a bishop.

4. He moves a queen.
5. He moves a castle.
6. He moves a pawn.

At the first move of the game, if the dice cast throws up one, it clearly cannot apply to the king, for this piece cannot move at all until the pawns have been cleared before him. In that event, a pawn would require to be moved.

The reason for the attribution of the numbers on the dice above shown to the chess pieces are fairly simple. The explanation must be sought in the numbers and powers of the squares on the Sephirotic Crosses. On the ten-squared cross, Kether, the Crown, is the first square, which is a fairly sound attribution to the king, who is Osiris, spirit—the Number 1. Number 2 on the Cross is Chokmah, the Yod of Tetragrammaton, Abba, and therefore the Knight is appropriate. Number 3 is Binah, to which is referred, in the Enochian attributions, the High Priestess card of the tarot. The mitre of the High Priestess determines the selection of the Bishop; 4 is Chesed, to which is attributed the tarot trump the Empress, who is the chess Queen; and 5 is the Castle, referred to Geburah, and the tarot card the Tower struck by lightning. The remaining number 6 refers to the movement of any pawn, one square.

It is not always necessary to use four players. Two individuals may play, each operating two lesser angles and two sets of pieces. Fire and air would be pitted against water and earth. If this is done, then the two sets of elemental pieces of any player must be regarded as a single unit in practice. That is to say if the first player whose pieces are the allies of fire and air checks the earth king, the second player must not continue the movements of the water pieces, which are his allies, until he has moved the earth king out of check by any of the usual technical forms of chess. The reader who understands and appreciates ordinary chess manoeuvring will appreciate what is expected of him in the course of play.

When the so-called “stalemate” occurs, which is when a player has no piece or pawn that he can move without incurring check, that is the king not being in check but so placed that he could not move without getting in to check, the result is that the player whose king is affected loses his turn until his state of “stalemate” is removed.

For the purposes of divination, an additional piece was employed. This was called the Ptah. Any book dealing with the Egyptian godforms will describe the form in question. A small figure of this should be made, and on the board it will represent the question or matter of divination. The mode of employing it is simple. It has no power at all, and is not actually used in the play. It is only used by the first player to be set on any square in the lesser angle from which he begins his play. Any square, that is, except the one on which the king first stands. The king must reach, in the course of the game, this square on which the Ptah is set and remain there for one round of the game undisturbed—that is without moving therefrom—and unchecked. A knowledge of the nature of the pyramids with their elemental composition, and some knowledge of the angelic forces represented by those squares and pyramids, will decide the player as to what square shall be selected for the placing of the Ptah. If the divinatory question concerns the fiery lesser angle of the element of earth, a question involving Capricornus and the figure Carcer ruled by Zazel, then the Ptah probably should be placed upon a square of the angle which is of the nature of cardinal earth, as representing the Yod type of earth, or on elemental fire, that is the Heh (final) type of fire. The ingenuity of the interested student will guide his judgment herein.

NOTES CONCERNING THE BOARDS AND THE PLAY GENERALLY

Every lesser angle throughout the tablets has a diagonal line of four squares starting from its prime square, which are allotted respectively to Aries, Gemini, Scorpio, and earth. From these four squares the bishops can move one square into a square of Libra, Sagittarius, Taurus, or water, these completing the series of squares in that lesser angle in which a bishop can move. Let us call this the Aries system of diagonal squares.

This diagonal is crossed by another which in the airy and watery boards is composed of Cancer, Leo, Virgo, and air squares, having as subsidiaries, squares of Aquarius, Pisces, Capricorn, and fire. In the earthy and fiery boards the second series of four form the diagonal, and the first the subsidiaries. Let us call this the Cancer series.

If we now examine the boards we shall see that the Aries system of any lesser angle is joined diagonally to the Aries system of the other three lesser angles, and that the Cancer also is similarly joined to every other Cancer system. So that we have two systems of squares, viz: the Aries and the Cancer; of the whole, each containing four squares allotted to every sign it contains. This resembles the black and white systems of squares of the ordinary board; and it is as if we allotted the white to Aries, and the black to Cancer.

When beginning a game see to which system the Ptah square belongs. Because if it be a square of the Aries system the attack of the opposing queens is insignificant, while that of the bishops is strong. In such a case the number of pieces is six: two bishops, two knights, and two rooks. That is, in these matters the airy attack is strong, and the watery weak.

If the Ptah be on a square of the Cancer system, one opposing queen directly attacks this square, but the bishops do not. In this case the number of attacking pieces is five: one queen, two knights, and two rooks. That is, in these matters the airy attack is insignificant, while the watery is strong.

If an opposing queen can attack the Ptah, the defence should note well which queen it is and should remember that this fact greatly enhances her power. He should thereupon not hesitate to exchange what might otherwise be considered a more powerful piece for her. She should certainly be exchanged for a bishop, and probably also for a knight.

The YHVH order of the pieces corresponds with their respective offensive and defensive powers.

Yod.	Knight.	The most offensive piece.
Heh.	Queen.	More offensive than defensive.
Vau.	Bishop.	More defensive than offensive.
Heh (final).	Rook.	Most defensive.

That is, in a general sense, because, according to the circumstances of the actual play, every piece is able to assume both roles of attacking or defending.

Note that, as in ordinary chess, opposing kings may not occupy contiguous squares. There must always be one square between them. This, however, does not apply to the kings who are allies. That is, if fire and air are allies, then the kings of these elements may approach each other and occupy contiguous squares. Naturally they do not check each other.

When a king has once been moved from the corner square which he occupied with another piece at the beginning of the game neither he nor that piece can be moved back again to that square unless it be vacant.

If the prime player's king is checked and he cannot move it, his game is arrested and his pieces cannot move until the pieces of his ally can release his king. That is to say, that his pieces remain in situ but having during that time of check no power of action, and can neither attack nor threaten; they only block the squares occupied. If the allied king can be checkmated, his partner continues to play and to seek to release him. When both kings are checkmated, the game is at an end, and the partners checkmated have lost the game. The game is also lost by the first player, when though neither he nor his ally is checkmated, the enemies hold such a position that the prime player cannot possibly attain the Ptah square.

The knights or fiery forces of the elements meet and clash violently in all parts, and are strong in attack against every thing and everywhere. Their moves, like fire, pass unarrested through the other elements in irregular courses like the lambent flame, leaping both diagonally and square-wise at every move. They contain the potential forces of the other pieces. Their force is similar to the tarot king, and to Chokmah. They are the Abba forces, and with the queens represent the Briatic forces of the scheme.

The queens or watery forces of the elements never clash with one another, but ever undulate onwards, each in its own course unaffected by opposing or crossing waves. But the watery forces only move in their respective preordained courses; they cannot leave their limits and enter upon the domain of others. Water, like fire, is unarrested and undulating, and like air and earth it can act diagonally or square-wise, containing the potential force of air and earth. They are the queen of the tarot, and Binah. They are the Aimah, and are of Briah.

The bishops are subtle and sharp, airy in quality, moving rapidly, but easily arrested in their course. They clash not with opposing bishops, and the friendly airs support each other in attack and defence. Where the active airs whirl the passives cannot come. They are the forces of the princes, and of Yetzirah, the Son.

The rooks are the heavy resisting powers of the princess, the earth by nature, mighty indeed in action when preceded by the action of the other three. That is, when in any matter the forces of fire, water, and air have been absorbed and equilibrated, i.e., removed from the board, the mighty powers of the castles come into play. But woe to him who too early calls these ponderous forces forth.

The rook moves through columns as through ranks. She is able, therefore, to reach every square on the board, and is very powerful. But her movement is very ponderous, and it is a piece that is not moved many times in a game unless the forces of the other elements have been absorbed in its working out. While the Aleph, Mem, and Shin forces are in full operation, the rook is easily attacked and with difficulty defended, unless she remain quiet, and act as a firm basis of support and defence to the side. If she, however, makes the mistake of entering early into action she is nearly sure to fall prey to the more subtle forces whose proper sphere is attacked.

If the more subtle forces do not bring about a solution of the question, and the matter has to be fought out to the bitter end, that is, if the Yetziratic and Briatic forces are absorbed and balanced in the matter, then do the ponderous forces of Assiah, the Princess, engage in powerful combat.
